Oakland gets first openly gay councilman

by Katie Szymanski

Just a couple of days after making history, Oakland City Council member Danny Wan is already knee-deep in potential projects.

Wan, 36, became the first openly gay person ever to sit on the Oakland City Council when he was appointed Monday, September 18, to occupy the District 2 seat left vacant by John Russo, who left last week to take the job of city attorney, which he was elected to in March. Wan beat out Russo's former chief of staff Judy DeVries as well as Wells Fargo attorney Paul Garrison when councilmembers chose him 6-1 during a second round of voting that followed many rounds of intense questioning.

Wan will serve two years before running for re-election, should he so choose. But his desire to start work immediately suggests that he plans to accomplish a lot in a short period of time. Just seconds after he was appointed, Wan vowed to "get down to work, right away," although his term doesn't officially begin until his swearing-in this Tuesday, September 26.

An Oakland resident since 1982, Wan said he represents a cross-section of society and has a broad range of experience to fill the needs of the job. He is currently an elected member of the East Bay Municipal Utility District for Oakland and Alameda, and Governor Gray Davis recently appointed him to the San Francisco Regional Water Quality Control Board. He is a graduate of the University of California.

World's biggest leather party hits SF

by Mister Marcus

To leather folk around the world, September means one thing: the annual Folsom Street Fair, which takes over a good portion of South of Market in San Francisco this Sunday, September 24.

Now in its 17th year, the South of Market Merchants' & Individuals' Lifestyles Events-sponsored street fair has amassed a volunteer corps of over 500 to manage what has been called the world's biggest leather party.

Ranked right up there with the Tournament of Roses Parade in Pasadena and the Chinese New Year Parade in San Francisco, the Folsom Street Fair has garnered global coverage with the ever-sensationalist press corps of the world. Film crews from the BBC in London, Australia, Japan, the Netherlands, France, and even Rio de Janeiro have attended the fair to record the leather, BDSM, and kink communities who converge here annually.

The gathering draws attendance figures of 300,000 to 500,000 stretched over a six-block area (Folsom Street from 7th to 12th) and is about celebrating a lifestyle no longer considered underground. Corporate giants are vying spiritedly to sponsor the event with financial and advertising generosity and of course, preferential sales spots at the fair.

Last year, SMMILE was able to donate over $165,000 to its designated charities. In his final year as the president of the board of directors of SMMILE, Paul Lester hopes to top that figure this year. An army of volunteers helps keep down expenses and the entertainment offered on at least half a dozen stages offers hip-hop, rock, country-western,

Marc Salomon: Green against the machine

by Liz Highleyman

Among the many supervisor candidates in the crowded District 6 race, Marc Salomon stands out as an independent candidate with fresh ideas. Salomon is running to oppose the "corrosive corruption of corporate dominance." He prides himself on his independence from both the Willie Brown Democratic Party machine and the opposition identified with Tom Ammiano, which he said is divided and has "squandered so many opportunities."

Salomon, 38, describes himself as a "Green anarchist in the Noam Chomsky style." Although at first blush it may seem odd for an anarchist to run for public office, Salomon believes "decisions are best made by the folks affected by them ... the people closest to a decision should be in the driver's - or the bicyclist's - seat." Salomon said that, "the only legitimate authority is that which is questioned - and current authorities believe they should not be questioned."

An "out queer bi fag" for 15 years, Salomon said that in San Francisco, "when folks run [for office] on the basis of identity politics, they are trying to hide something." While he believes that LGBT assimila-

Etheridge and Cypher call it quits

by Cynthia Laird

Lesbian rock singer Melissa Etheridge and her longtime partner, director Julie Cypher, announced Monday, September 18 that they are ending their relationship. The announcement came about a month after the highly publicized breakup of comedian Ellen DeGeneres and movie actress Anne Heche.

Etheridge and Cypher issued a joint statement saying that while they are ending their relationship they will continue to raise their two children together. "With the utmost love and respect for one another, we have decided to separate," said the statement. "As committed parents, our top priority continues to be what is in the best interest of our children. Though elements of our lives will change, our family will always remain intact."

The brief statement was released by Etheridge's management company; no further comment was immediately available.

Etheridge and Cypher have been together for 12 years and have two children - daughter Bailey, 3, and son Beckett, 21 months - who share one biological father, rock legend David Crosby.

All four lesbians - Etheridge, Cypher, DeGeneres, and Heche, earlier this year spoke out publicly against Proposition 22, the so-called Knight initiative that California voters approved in March. The initiative states that only marriage between one man and one woman is valid in California. ▼

Compassion in fashion

Children of Uganda help put a human face on the AIDS crisis in Africa during Macy's annual Passport fashion show event Thursday, September 14 at Fort Mason. Here, some of the children gather with an official of American Express, model Cindy Crawford, and former basketball star Magic Johnson, center. The evening included hot new fashions as well as words of encouragement from actress Elizabeth Taylor, a longtime leader in the fight against AIDS.

KGO bans HIV prevention commercials from daytime TV

by Terry Beswick

Oprah would probably cope with it, and Rosie wouldn't bat an eyelash, but programming officials at the local

ABC/Disney television affiliate are apparently squeamish about men with bare chests and about a transgender with breasts.

KGO Channel 7 has rejected a new federally-sponsored "HIV Stops With Me" commercial featuring seven HIV-positive "spokesmodels" arguing for taking responsibility for their personal health and for the health of their community.

Based on a telephone survey of the viewing habits of gay and bisexual men in San Francisco, the local social marketing firm that produced the commercial wanted to air the ad during the Oprah and Rosie O'Donnell talk shows, found to be the most popular shows on the ABC network. The station countered with an offer to air the commercials after 10 p.m.

"What KGO said is that children six or seven years old will see it and ask their parents about it and they won't know what to say," said Les Pappas, president of Better World Advertising, which produced the ads and had offered the station $12,000 to air them during daytime TV. "It's outrageous."

Targeted to HIV-positive gay men and transgenders in the Bay Area, the ads are part of a $350,000 social marketing campaign subcontracted to BWA — one component of a Department of Public Health $1,826,877 contract with the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The CDC also awarded funds to five other cities for demonstration projects designed to confine HIV within the HIV-positive community.

Edited in a rapid-fire style, there are no touching or kissing segments in the ad, and no genitalia or breasts are revealed.

"They are barechested but you see men without their shirts on all the time," said Pappas. "These are adult shows."

"I believe in being honest and open," Felicia Elizondo, the one spokesmodel that chooses to give her last name to the media, says in the ad.

"There's nothing sexual about it," Elizondo told the Bay Area Reporter. "It's just spreading the HIV prevention message."

Felicia Elizondo

Adding to the controversy, the San Francisco Chronicle reported Tuesday, September 19 that Elizondo, a male-to-female transgender, is shown "holding her nipples" in the ad, viewable online at hivstopswithme.org.

"I'm really upset," said Elizondo, 54, who underwent sexual reassignment surgery 25 years ago. "I'm a transgender woman, I'm HIV-positive and I'm taking responsibility for my life and the lives of other people."

Elizondo said the commercial is designed "like a jolt" to wake people up to the fact that the HIV epidemic is not over.

Concerned that there is an organized effort to block the commercial from the airwaves, Pappas is worried that KGO is not the only station that will make it harder for his ad to reach its intended audience.

"It's not over because now we have Channel 2 saying, 'We don't want to show it during The Simpsons.'"

Cheryl Cox, general sales manager for KTVU Channel 2, told the B.A.R. that the commercial would be aired on the station, but would not confirm that it would air during The Simpsons.

"These are real issues in this society," said Pappas. "It's not something parents and kids should be afraid of." ▼

Does Davis get it?

Gov. unclear about reasons for tranny bill

by Katie Szymanski

Lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender advocates are still in shock at the news that Governor Gray Davis this week vetoed a bill that would have allowed transsexuals easier access to new birth certificates.

AB1851, by Assemblyman John Longville (D-Rialto), was written to outline the procedures for new birth certificates as they applied to post-operative transsexuals who were born outside of California or are now residing in another state. The bill, largely considered non-controversial because of its administrative nature, simply clarified the law already in existence for transsexuals looking to obtain birth certificates reflecting a name and sex change. Yet Davis's reason for the veto seems to reflect a lack of comprehension for what the bill was about; in a letter to California Assembly members, Davis not only seemed to oppose laws that already exist for transsexuals, but justified his veto by citing the duties of the state registrar, even though the bill was designed to change those duties.

"This bill is unnecessary since a court order for a name change based on a change of sex is already available to the public, and a driver's license or U.S. passport is obtainable without a certificate of change of sex," said Davis's September 19 statement.

Davis would be right if he were only talking about people with all their state paperwork, but the bill was meant for those born or living abroad.

"My understanding is he thinks it's already available, and it is not," said Eric Astacaan, lobbyist for California Alliance for Pride and Equality. "And then he talks about the registrar procedures when the bill was actually about establishing new procedures."

Davis's reference to California registrar duties said that requiring the state registrar to issue a certificate was inconsistent with its purpose to "register only events that occur in California." Yet, that was the point of the bill. Only events in California can lead to new documents for transsexuals; the bill was supposed to change that.

Boyce Hinman, administrator of the Lambda Letters Project, another statewide lobbying group, also denounced the veto of AB1851. "The veto was actually no great surprise. The governor has been a consistent opponent of civil rights bills this year," Hinman said. "It is sad. AB1851 was really just a minor bill offering modest clarification of the already existing procedure for the recognition of a post-operative transsexual's new sex and new gender-appropriate name."

"I am flabbergasted," said CAPE's Astacaan. "We're trying to talk to governor's office to clarify what might have been a misunderstanding so we can bring the bill back next year." ▼

Stormy Leather fetish store expands to the Castro

by Katie Szymanski

Girls looking for leather, listen up: the Castro now actually has something that carries garments and toys for women. You may still have to fight the neighborhood boys for sidewalk space and a place at the bar, but fetish shopping just got easier, thanks to the addition of Stormy Leather, on the second floor of the Worn Out West building, 582 Castro Street.

Stormy Leather has been in the upstairs space since September 8, and business has been picking up as more people become aware of its second retail location.

"We're very excited," Rachel Schwarz, a five-year employee of Stormy Leather, told the Bay Area Reporter. "So far it has been a lot of fun."

The woman-owned shop for all genders is still alive and kicking at its Howard Street site, but the Castro branch boasts a larger stock of men's latex and lingerie, and of course, more women's stuff than the Castro has seen in a while. The Castro site carries a wide range of toys and medical supplies, although bigger bondage items such as cages "stayed at Howard Street; they were just too scary to carry up those stairs," according to Schwarz.

The two stores are wired together via computer, which means inventory checks can easily refer a customer to the other location. Stormy Leather will also operate its mail-order operation out of the Castro, and is currently updating its Web site to include all of its products. As for business, Schwarz notes that the Castro site couldn't have opened at a better time.

"We are looking forward to a crazy weekend," she said, referring to the legendary leather festivities of the Folsom Street Fair, this Sunday, September 24.

Stormy Leather's Howard Street store will be closed for Folsom, but will have a booth at the fair. Stormy-Castro will be open for both Folsom and the upcoming Castro Street Fair on October 1. ▼

BART's only gay man
seeks re-election

by Katie Szymanski

It's not often that a public transit official is known for his political involvement, but BART board member Tom Radulovich always seems to turn up wherever the action is. The openly gay Radulovich, 33, is known not only for his leadership when it comes to managing the Bay Area's closest thing to a subway system, but for helping to create and stand behind progressive policies and campaigns in San Francisco and beyond.

It was Radulovich who came out opposed to advertisement censorship on BART last year; BART's contract with Transportation Displays Inc. was not working, he said, after TDI refused to carry an anti-war ad from the Berkeley group California Peace Action Education Fund.

It was Radulovich who persuaded BART to add gender identity to the transit district's non-

discrimination policy; he also worked with Community United Against Violence to deliver transgender sensitivity training to

BART police officers.

And it was Radulovich again who secured $400,000 of state funding this year with the help of Assemblywoman Carole Migden to study the possibility of opening a BART station at 30th and Mission streets; he also got $5 million with the help of Assemblyman Kevin Shelley for the renovating of the Balboa Park station. Both of these projects will be based on "neighborhood planning," a process where residents decide how the station should look, operate, and be integrated into the district. Neighborhood planning also will be used in Radulovich's push for "transportation villages," a concept where transit construction looks for opportunities to integrate affordable housing and businesses into the station design; the idea is endorsed by the Housing Action Coalition, of which Radulovich is a member.

When it comes to politics, count Radulovich on the lefty

Speak out about LGBT community

by Katie Szymanski

It gets tiring, hearing all the right-wing lies about lesbians, gays, bisexuals, and transgenders. What's worse is knowing that a portion of the younger generation under anti-LGBT propaganda will feel trapped into gender and sexuality stereotypes, with no role models available to them.

You can help to change that, thanks to a program initiated by the Pacific Center for Human Growth, a center for LGBT people in Berkeley.

The Pacific Center's speakers bureau is looking for people who are comfortable speaking in front of a crowd and talking with students and community members about queer issues and our communities. Participants tour schools and community groups in order to better educate the public about LGBT people, issues, misconceptions, and lives. The time commitment and scheduling for this volunteer opportunity is flexible, and people of color, youth, transgenders, and bisexuals are especially encouraged to apply.

The next speaker bureau training dates are Wednesday, September 27, from 6-8 p.m., and Saturday, September 30, from 1-5 p.m. Attendance at both training dates is required to become a speaker.

Those interested in making speaking a regular gig should contact Amy at (510) 548-8283, or amy@pacificcenter.org for more information on the upcoming trainings. The Pacific Center is located at 2712 Telegraph Avenue in Berkeley. ▼

Flash back to the '70s at Spectrum gala

by Terry Beswick

Man, the 1970s were cool. As the Vietnam War dragged on, the funky iconography, hippie-dippie fashion, and various trippy ideas that prevailed among the long-haired, batiked youth of the 1960s were only magnified by the passage of time, catapulted into the popular culture of yet another far-out decade, and the intellectual, political, and aesthetic influences that climaxed a quarter century ago continue to endure today.

As the 1960s drew to a close — while Harvard and Yale were putting the finishing touches on the formal educations of Al Gore and George W. Bush, respectively — it was all about communes, peace signs, smiley faces, and other subliminal forces that threatened to take over much of popular Western culture.

In 1969, Woodstock and Haight-Ashbury's Summer of Love helped show that "everything is beautiful in its own way," and Ray Stevens set it to music the next year.

Also in 1969, proud and brave drag queens in Manhattan took a history-making stand against police persecution of gay men and lesbians in the Stonewall rebellion, inspiring LGBT people around the world, and giving us the courage to come out and simply show love for one another — though it took the Captain & Tennille until 1975 to record the sentiment with "love, love will keep us together."

But "by 1979, more than 50,000 people gathered for the first March on Washington for Gay Rights," noted Paula Pilecki, executive director of Spectrum, Marin's lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender community center. "This was the decade that gave birth to Spectrum, from the kitchen table of our founder, the Reverend Janie Spahr."

"Love American Style," a gala fundraiser for the center's programs and services in Marin County is planned for this Saturday, September 23, and is expected to flash guests back a few years with a generous sampling of popular culture from the 1970s. Along with a silent auction, a buffet dinner, dancing, and celebrity emcees, guests will be treated to vintage music, dancing, TV shows, movies, fashion, video arcade, and more.

Though dubbed "vintage retro," some relics of the time before Ronald Reagan really are just plain groovy, and the cultural repercussions just keep on truckin' even today, whether or not you identify as a flower-child at heart.

Banned blood

Over the last several years, we haven't promoted the American Red Cross' appeals for blood donations, primarily because a large segment of our readership — healthy gay and bisexual men — can't donate blood. This draconian federal policy may have been prudent 20 years ago when the AIDS epidemic was raging and scientists were desperately trying to develop treatments for the disease, and when HIV prevention experts launched their safe sex campaigns. Tainted blood was responsible for some infections, particularly among hemophiliacs and those requiring blood transfusions; and, as a result, the nation's system of blood banks went through a period of adjustment by instituting tests for donated blood and prohibiting gay men from donating.

Today, however, those policies are woefully out of step with scientific advances. Tremendous strides in science have been made in HIV/AIDS research. New tests can detect HIV antibodies in the blood within just 20 days of infection. Blood donated through the nation's blood banks undergoes rigorous testing for blood-borne infections. Yet, the Food and Drug Administration insists that men who have sex with men — even once since 1977 — are banned from donating blood.

Last week, an FDA advisory panel met in Maryland to consider revising the ban, partly because, currently, the nation has regular shortages of blood. There are instances across the country in which patients are literally dying because there isn't enough blood needed for necessary operations, such as liver transplants. The proposed revision would have only marginally improved the policy, as it still called for excluding men who have had sex with another man even once within the last year; yet even that revision failed by one vote.

The Blood Centers for the Pacific in the Bay Area supported the idea of a one-year deferral. Locally, Supervisor Mark Leno has been at the forefront of the issue, going so far as to stage a protest at a San Francisco blood bank earlier this year after yet another of those "urgent appeals" for blood. Leno's challenger in the upcoming District 8 race, Eileen Hansen, former public policy director of the AIDS Legal Referral Panel, also has been fighting for many years to get this discriminatory policy changed. Over the years, she has testified before the Blood Products Advisory Committee, the group that met last week.

In this day of advanced science, the advisory committee of the FDA has chosen the path of least resistance, continuing to adhere to an outdated policy that treats all gay men as second-class citizens. Science can meet the challenge of keeping the blood supply safe; and while the risk for HIV infection is there, it is remote. Statistically, people run a greater risk of dying in a plane crash than they do of contracting HIV. Last year, Blood Centers of the Pacific collected 100,000 units of blood; only three tested positive for HIV.

The status quo remains public policy, and hundreds of thousands of potential blood donors are rejected because they are gay. Think about that the next time the Red Cross asks for your blood. ▼

Prop. A will fix branch libraries

by Supervisor Mark Leno

This November, you will have an opportunity to help San Francisco's branch libraries by supporting a bond measure which will allow the San Francisco Public Library to undertake major rehabilitation projects at many of its neighborhood branches. This bond program aims to strengthen and upgrade 19 branches, construct five new buildings and make system-wide improvements to support the branches.

Our branch libraries are an essential public resource — providing educational, social, and occupational opportunities for over 4 million people last year. By providing free access to books, other materials, and computers, they allow people from all backgrounds the same access to knowledge and information. They provide educational and social programs for children like Homework Help for teens, Storytime for young children and lapsit for infants. A host of books, periodicals, newspapers, books-on-tape, video and audio cassettes, compact discs, and a number of special programs like Scrabble Night are available to adults and seniors. Branch libraries offer materials in a variety of languages and programs tailored to the age, cultural and socioeconomic differences among patrons.

But our branch libraries are in need of renovation. Some of San Francisco's branches have not undergone any structural work since they were originally built — this means that in some cases as many as 86 years have gone by without electrical upgrades, new restrooms and more. Engineers have identified 15 branches that could partially or totally collapse during a major earthquake. At least nine library branches inhibit disabled access to one or both floors and many other branches do not provide accessible restrooms or other public amenities. The bond is designed to help bring the branch libraries up to today's standards and prepare them for the future.

It is important to note how well represented the LGBT community is throughout our public library system. The James C. Hormel Gay & Lesbian Center and Collection is perhaps the most well known example of the many resources providing patrons with access to information about our community. Branch libraries, in particular, most directly link library services to the unique needs of the gay community. That is just one of the reasons Proposition A has received such widespread support from leaders representing the LGBT community including Supervisors Tom Ammann, Leslie Katz and Treasurer Susan Leal, as well as the endorsements of both the Alice B. Toklas Lesbian & Gay Democratic Club and the Harvey Milk LGBT Democratic Club.

The Eureka Valley branch, officially dedicated as the Eureka Valley-Harvey Milk Memorial branch, is an important resource for the Castro community and beyond. Located at 3555 16th Street, it offers diverse and extensive collections including materials by gay and lesbian authors and about LGBT issues which reflect the varied interests of the neighborhood. It also provides programs like weekly storytelling sessions for children. Built in 1961, it is one of the city's newer branch libraries handling an average of 43 visitors per hour. Still, it needs upgrading.

With a high seismic hazard rating, the building is susceptible to major damage during a large earthquake. It requires a whole host of improvements to make the building safe including foundation improvements, new steel bracing, new concrete walls, plywood sheathing, roof anchors, and replacement of the exterior wall glass.

Money from the bond will allow the branch to undergo a seismic retrofit to ensure the safety of all patrons and staff. Plans for this branch also include expansion into the rear patio area to add new space for a meeting/program room, computers, and expanded shelving for collections. Access for all patrons will be improved through remodeled restrooms and wider aisles for improved mobility. The building's plumbing, heating, and ventilation systems will be updated as well. Likewise, the building's support systems, including electrical outlets and internet wiring, will be modernized to support computers and other equipment. Overall, the branch will receive a much-needed boost into the 21st century through the proposed safety and modernization projects.

If the bond passes, the branches throughout the city will have the same opportunity for growth and change that the Chinatown, Mission, and Ocean

View branches have already seen become reality. These branches have revitalized their neighborhoods by becoming new community centerpieces. The bond's goal is to do the same throughout San Francisco. Conversely, not one dollar of the bond will be used for increased staffing, new furniture, or collections. The purpose of Proposition A is to make our neighborhood libraries safe for the patrons and accessible for persons with disabilities.

It has been said that knowledge is power. We cannot expect to empower San Francisco residents if we can not even provide that knowledge in a safe and accessible place that is well lit and well ventilated.

I encourage you to support our Eureka Valley-Harvey Milk Memorial branch and the entire library system by voting yes on Proposition A this fall. Together we can help the library successfully move into the 21st century — with branches in safe, accessible buildings featuring an assortment of materials and programs appealing to all residents. If you're interested in learning more about the bond measure, please contact the Committee to Save Our Branch Libraries at 241-7321 or libraryA@pacbell.net. ▼

Slapped on both cheeks

I want to thank Wayne Friday for mentioning my campaign in his September 7 and 14 columns. I do want to clarify a couple of points:

First, I do have a chance of winning the Board of Supervisors seat in District 11. Secondly, just because Amos Brown is the incumbent running in this district, I must clear it up that I am not running against him but that he is running against this district. The residents are making it clear to Reverend Brown that they did not appreciate the fact that he evicted his tenants, a mother/grandmother, Edith Love; her disabled gay son; and her 2-year-old grandson just to run in this district because he has a better chance of winning here. To the contrary, the voters will speak in November.

I am also running on the platform that no matter if you are white, black, Latino, Chinese, male, female, gay, straight, bisexual, transgendered, or questioning youth, everyone will be treated equally and without any form of harassment.

One last item: I felt that I was slapped in the face, on both cheeks, by two of the prominent Democratic clubs in San Francisco: the Harvey Milk LGBT Democratic Club and the Alice B. Toklas Lesbian and Gay Democratic Club. To totally ignore the fact that I am the best candidate running in District 11 and an active and supporting member of the gay community, they felt that I did not deserve their endorsement. I am sad and disappointed, but that only encourages me more to run a better, effective, and solid campaign.

Steven R. Currier

Candidate for Supervisor, District 11

Thanks to protest speakers

I want to thank the 100-plus people who came out on September 11 to protest KPIX for airing the Dr. Laura TV show. As reported in the B.A.R. ["Kaiser, PG&E 'unaware' of Dr. Laura ads on first TV show, demo in SF," September 14], the rally was a huge success and has helped our campaign to convince local advertisers to withdraw support from the show. We were one of 31 cities who protested in front of local television stations that day. This issue has clearly mobilized the queer community nationwide and I'm pleased San Francisco is a major part of this effort. I particularly want to thank all of the speakers at the KPIX protest for providing diverse and intelligent reasons why KPIX should not run this show: Supervisor Tom Ammiano, Supervisor Mark Leno, Supervisor Sue Bierman, Rabbi Jane Rachel Litman, Dr. Jerrold Polansky from the Gay and Lesbian Medical Association, Peter Teague from Horizons Foundation, Kirsten Boyd from Assemblywoman Carole Migden's office, Jim Spahr from PFLAG/North Bay, Will Doherty, co-organizer of the protest, and the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence.

Finally, I want to thank everyone who helped make signs, spread the word, and make this protest a great San Francisco event. This was grassroots activism at its best! I encourage everyone to check www.stopdr-laura.com often for updates on national and local advertisers. If you would like to be updated on local activity, e-mail SfStopDrLaura@aol.com.

Where was DPH?

Public health workers must focus their energies – and the taxpayer dollars budgeted for AIDS prevention and education – on the two groups most at risk: young gay men and young drug addicts.

Last month, the B.A.R. published a heart-rending letter from a young gay man who believes that he was knowingly infected with HIV by an older gay partner (Aziel Hayes, "Lied to by ex-boyfriend," August 17). According to the youngster, he called the San Francisco Department of Public Health and was told that there was nothing he could do about his situation. For his brave and touching letter, the youngster was called a "moron" in a subsequent letters column (Randy Wellington, "It takes two," September 7).

No response was forthcoming from the DPH.

Now a DPH employee writes to suggest that bus drivers should be educated about their non-risk of acquiring HIV on the job (Seth Watkins, "Muni workers have to earn respect," September 14).

Juxtaposing the two people in need of AIDS education – a young gay man and a bus driver – clearly top priority must be given to the person at highest risk.

After we have worked hard for years to get increased federal funding for AIDS prevention and education, most of the money is being wasted on people whose risk is minimal. More than five years ago, this incredible misallocation of taxpayer dollars was detailed at length in a front-page story in the Wall Street Journal ("Health hazard: AIDS fight is skewed by federal campaign exaggerating risks; most heterosexuals face scant peril but receive large portion of funds; less goes to gays, addicts," May 1, 1996).

Sadly, public health officials continue to fail young gay men and young drug addicts.

At the very least, the DPH should deny or apologize for the false answer given the newly-infected youngster. Surely the DPH has a position on intentional HIV infections. Certainly the DPH can offer some advice to the newly-infected.

As a community, we deserve better from people whose salaries we pay.

Homoerotic distractions

In reference to Baruch Gould's September 7 letter about the Gold's Gym at the Castro and the new "anti-gay-friendly," "non-homoerotic environment," I have some suggestions for Gould:

He should take his homoerotic act to a main street or a park. Probably there he would be an "eye catch" by a Hunk-papi policeman. The policeman would tie him down and later handcuff him. Wouldn't this be a very erotic experience? And then the policeman will take him to jail and lose the keys.

Homoerotic experiences while doing exercise are distracting. I want to get my money's worth when I go to the gym. And I want my shower clean.

Changes at Gold's

Regarding the changes at Gold's Gym Castro née Market Street Gym (MSG) and the homogenization (irony intended) of the Castro, Frank Sieple and Baruch Gold (letters, September 7) both have good points. Gyms are not sex clubs, and Gold's has made significant improvements to gym hours, facilities, and equipment. At the same time, it would be a shame if gay men's sexual energy (as opposed to sexual activity) could no longer be celebrated at this central Castro gym.

I work out at Gold's, and I still see guys wearing tight clothing, guys without shirts, guys kissing and hugging in greeting, guys engaging in "girl talk." What disturbs me personally about Gold's Gym is the ongoing decrease in services that has been happening since the chaining of this gym:

MSG had space to walk around the exercise floor; not a lot, but enough. Gold's upstairs workout floor is overcrowded with equipment, forcing one to duck, twist, and climb as one navigates one's way to the desired equipment or to open or close a window; in all fairness, this condition could improve once renovations are complete.

MSG provided over 120 small rental lockers at $6 per month ($72 per year). These are useful so one does not need to lug all of one's gym stuff around all day on public transit, and most such lockers were actually used. Abruptly, Gold's has cut that to 60 small lockers, and is charging $200 for six months or $375 for a year; that's more than gym membership at some gyms! (In comparison, the Y charges $120 per year for rental lockers.)

I sent a letter of complaint about the excessive locker prices to Gold's Castro management on August 20, with no response as of September 8. It appears fewer than 25 lockers have been rented. Despite the low rental response, Gold's hasn't lowered its prices. I guess chains don't need to be responsive to their customers.

Other disappearances include a Jacuzzi, a staffed fitness help desk, towel rentals, a suggestion box, TV sets for treadmill users, a couple of clocks, some restroom lighting, neon art, records of who had paid for rental lockers at the old MSG rate, and membership cards one could use to obtain discounts at some vitamin stores.

As for the patron in questionable clothing (Sieple's letter): if it's the guy I think it is, he wore contour warm-up shorts, not see-through underwear. It didn't bother me any, and it was no worse than one might see at a swimming pool, but I can see how others might be uncomfortable with it given that he is quite well equipped. Still, if the gym staff confronted him in public about it (Richard Cornwall's letter, August 24), it would have been much better if they had politely discussed it with him in private.

I think the big issue of homogenization and desexing will come over guys working out without shirts. Again, this is nothing more explicit than one might see at a family beach, but it seems to be an issue that will separate a gay-friendly gym whose focus is on working out from a gym whose focus is on marketing itself. And it's one more thing which will determine whether Gold's Castro will become an indistinguishable chain gym that gives me no reason to patronize them over some other gym.

Gay marriage in Texas? Not exactly

by Dale Carpenter

The issue at hand is the often oversold relationship between the gay and transgendered movements. On September 16, Robin and Jessica Wicks married each other in San Antonio. In the aftermath of what the Houston Chronicle called "the first time same-sex partners have been legally betrothed in Texas," why aren't gays declaring victory in the gay-marriage war? Why aren't gay couples flocking to Texas to get a first-rate marriage license instead of to Vermont to get a second-rate "civil union" certificate?

There's a good reason for this collective gay yawn. It turns out this particular same-sex marriage has a large asterisk beside it, offering no real legal opening to gay couples and demonstrating the limits of the connection between gay and transgender causes. The event reminds us that transgenders challenge the very definition of male and female while most gays are comfortable with those categories.

This tale gets a bit complicated, so hang with me. Jessica Wicks is a male-to-female transsexual; that is, she was born a male and has since been "reassigned" as a female (her attorneys have declined to say whether her anatomy has actually been surgically altered). In most of Texas, Jessica is now legally considered female for purposes of marriage. When she applied to marry Robin, another woman, Houston authorities turned them away. Like every other state, Texas forbids same-sex marriages.

So Jessica and Robin called Phyllis Frye, a tireless and creative transgender attorney in Houston. Frye noted that a San Antonio court held recently in the case of Littleton v. Prang that sex is set at birth (presumably by chromosome structure) and cannot be altered by subsequent surgical or other techniques. Once a man always a man, the court declared. At the time, transgender activists bitterly criticized the Littleton decision because it denied that a person's sex could be chosen—a central legal goal of their movement.

Frye, skilled at making silk purses of sow's ears, advised Jessica and Robin to apply for a marriage license in San Antonio, where Jessica would still be considered male. San Antonio authorities, following the Littleton ruling, granted the application.

They reasoned this was a case of a male (Jessica) marrying a female (Robin). In San Antonio, unlike Houston and other areas of Texas, theirs was not considered a same-sex marriage at all. It was a good old-fashioned opposite-sex marriage, with a twist.

Note this anomaly. For the time being in Texas, it is possible for a transsexual to marry a person of either sex. For example, a male-to-female transsexual can marry a man in most of the state. The same person can now go to San Antonio and marry a woman. Transgender advocates are skillfully exploiting the conflict in Texas law over the definition of male and female.

The anomaly may not last long. The Littleton ruling is being appealed. Even if the appeal does not diminish the Littleton holding, another court decision may overrule it. If that doesn't happen, the Texas Legislature may step in to cement the definitions of male and female under state law. Some transgender activists are actively pushing the Legislature to act, an odd strategy since any action by Texas pols will likely shut off marriage to some transgenders.

What does all this mean for gay couples? Frye thinks it may be the Roe v. Wade of gay marriage, exposing the legal fragility of the ban on same-sex marriage. Others say that even if it has little direct legal value for gays, it may help erode cultural bias against the idea of same-sex marriages by showcasing what appear to be same-sex couples. Yet it will likely have neither legal nor much cultural significance for gays.

In legal terms, the Wicks's marriage capitalizes on the momentary confusion in Texas law over what constitutes a male and a female. How very nice for them. But Texas law has not budged an inch on the basic principle that two people of the same sex cannot marry. An anatomical, chromosomal, and gender-identified male cannot marry another such male. That leaves the overwhelming majority of gay couples—for whom sex reassignment is hardly a desirable option—out in the cold.

In cultural terms, there's not likely to be much erosion in opposition to gay marriage because of marriages like the Wicks's. Such couplings are so rare they will hardly register a drop in the ocean of opposite-sex marriage.

There is a fundamental difference between the gay and transgender causes, a difference that is often submerged in the we're-one-big-happy-family rhetoric of the "GLBT movement." Transgenders are deeply and probably immutably uncomfortable with the sex into which they are born. In medical parlance, they have "gender dysphoria." They want the freedom to live life as a member of the other sex. Most gays, on the other hand, are not uncomfortable with the sex into which they are born. Gay women are quite content being women, for example.

As the Wicks's marriage demonstrates, gays and transgenders have divergent priorities and interests. For the overwhelming majority of gays, gender dysphoria is as alien as heterosexuality. The gay movement is largely about establishing the proposition that two people of the same sex, both happy with the anatomy they were born with and the gender identity they possess, can live loving lives together. The Wicks's marriage is about something else. We should wish them well, but we're right to put off calling the caterer. ▼

Gore, Democrats win debate over debates

by Wayne Friday

The standoff over presidential debates ended this past weekend with an agreement by Democrat Al Gore and his Republican opponent, George W. Bush, to face off in three debates to be held next month. The joint agreement by the two campaigns marked a retreat by Bush, who for over two weeks had insisted he would only accept one of the debates originally proposed by the bipartisan Commission on Presidential Debates and had insisted that additional debates must be held on specific network shows such as NBC's Meet The Press, which comes from Washington early on Sunday mornings or on CNN's Larry King Live that appears only on cable television.

Bush, however, quietly backed away from his previous demands when it became clear that his plans for debates on a network such as CNN, a cable channel, as opposed to those proposed by the commission's debates that are covered by all three major networks, was backfiring and that the Texas governor was being seen as attempting to duck as many widely viewed debates as he could. Pointing out that the Larry King Live show in particular appears only on cable, and that hundreds of thousands of homes don't have access to it, many political writers, even some previously thought to be favorable to Bush, were saying that the Bush campaign was clearly trying to steer the debates to areas where they would be seen by fewer voters.

The "debates over the debates" started by the Bush campaign was clearly costing the Republican nominee leverage and some were taking it as a clear indication that the Texas governor was more than a little worried about facing the vice president and even some of his Republican supporters were calling the Bush tactic a political mistake.

In the end, Bush capitulated and agreed to the original three commission debates. The announcement by the two campaigns means that the presidential debates will take place, all to be carried on the three major networks. The first, on October 3, will be held in Boston and will follow the traditional two-podium format; the second will take place in Winston-Salem on October 11 and will have the two candidates seated at a table, and the third (and likely final) debate between Gore and Bush will take place in St. Louis on October 17 and will be conducted in a town-hall format. PBS newsmen Jim Lehrer will moderate all three debates.

Vice presidential candidates Senator Joseph Lieberman, the Democrat, will meet Republican veep nominee Richard Cheney in a single debate to be held October 5 in Danville, Kentucky.

Nationally, some of Bush's top GOP supporters privately criticized him for creating the "debate on debates," saying that the entire process made Bush appear to be weary of facing Gore, who is generally thought to be the more skilled debater. Some, however, wondered if the tactic might eventually play to Bush's advantage in that he is generally felt to be such a poor debater that if he does even reasonably well or even manages to simply hold his own against the vice president, some will immediately tag him as a "winner" of sorts.

Meanwhile, most national polls continue to show Gore leading Bush, with the latest Newsweek poll showing Gore ahead by double digit figures. Bush was leading most of the summer. The Texas governor has managed to step on his own message these past few weeks by creating the unnecessary debate question, getting caught using profanity while describing a respected New York Times reporter into an open microphone (after months of calling for a "civil" campaign), and by going negative against Gore in a highly-publicized television ad campaign. Two ads were pulled by the Bush camp, including one with the subliminal "RATS" message. Although even some Republicans are quietly saying that the presidential campaign is already lost to Gore, this one is far from over. Given Gore's supposed advantage of being the vice president, the nation's record-breaking booming economy, the all-time low jobless rate, and dropping crime rates in America, by all accounts, Gore should be far ahead of Bush with less than eight weeks before the November 7 election. He is not. Gore might indeed be ahead in the polls, but he does not, by any means, have this election won, as analyses of the Electoral College map still show an extremely close race. Remember, national polls only provide a snapshot of what people are thinking, but the presidency is won by electoral votes.

What are the three things that will most assuredly decide the election in November? Debates, debates, debates. While the conventional wisdom is that Gore should prevail in the debates against Bush, who continues to mangle the English language nearly every time he approaches a microphone, again the expectation factor comes into play. Bush can, in fact, do poorly and still appear to "win" one of any of the debates simply by not completely blowing them. While things look good now for Gore, they could (and likely will) turn around again, maybe even a couple of times, by November 7. While I've got to believe that American voters (particularly gay and lesbian voters) have to know that Gore is far and away the better choice in this election, I believe the election will be the closest in over three decades; Bush and the Republicans, desperate to take back the White House, will stop at nothing to win.

Again, October 3, 11, and 17 are the dates of the all-important debates that will almost certainly determine who becomes the next president of the United States.

Politics and people

While five Vermont Republican state legislators who earlier this year voted for that state's highly emotional same-sex civil union law (the nation's first) were defeated in last week's Vermont state primary by Republicans opposed to the law, state Representative Tom Little, a Republican who was the main author of the law, easily withstood his primary challenge. Indeed, three other Republican state legislators and one Democrat who were targeted by anti-civil union groups survived the primary. State Auditor Ed Flanagan, the nation's first openly gay elected statewide officeholder, won the Democratic nomination for U.S. Senator and will face GOP incumbent Senator Jim Jeffords, who will go into the November election a slight favorite.

Oops! It was inevitable that with so many openly gay candidates running for supervisor, I would inadvertently leave some out of last week's column. Jim Bagi e-mailed to let me know he's running in District 5 (the Haight), and friends of Jim Rodriguez wrote to tell me that he is running in District 10 (Bayview Hunters Point). My apologies to both.

The day after last week's nationally televised debate between New York Republican Representative Rick Lazio and first lady Hillary Clinton for that state's open U.S. Senate seat, a second-grader in Rochester, New York asked Lazio "Why did you fight with Mrs. Clinton?" Lazio, taken aback by the youngster's question, limply replied "we were just talking about our different ideas." The question, however, pointed out why Lazio, in the mind of most observers, lost that debate to Mrs. Clinton.

In a debate that is crucial in a neck-and-neck race, Lazio turned aggressive and some would say nasty by walking across the stage to where Mrs. Clinton stood and thrusting a paper in her face, demanding that she "sign it!" Clearly, the tactic backfired on the young congressman and in a state where Democratic presidential nominee Al Gore is said to be leading by 20 percentage points (or roughly 1 million votes), Lazio cannot expect that many voters will vote for Gore and then cross over to vote for a Republican Senate candidate. Clinton already supposedly leads Lazio by 5-8 percentage points in most state polls, and assuming Gore carries the Empire State by the margin expected, Hillary Clinton will likely replace Daniel Patrick Moynihan as the state's next U.S. Senator.

I can't quite visualize Bill Clinton in a cheerleader uniform, but the president said last week he has a new role in life. "My family has a new candidate, and my party has a new leader," Clinton said, adding that "I've always said that even during the months Mr. Bush was far ahead in the polls, I never lost faith that Al Gore would eventually win this election." ▼

Game over

Southern Police Station, September 16: Two individuals responsible for numerous armed robberies in the Castro, Noe Valley, and Ingleside districts over the last five months have been apprehended. A break came for investigators when one of the suspects tried to cash a check taken during one of the heists. Wells Fargo notified police of attempted forgery and were able to lift a fingerprint from the forged check. The print matched a woman who had been arrested numerous times for similar offenses, and police took her into custody for questioning.

The woman confessed to participating in over 18 armed robberies along with her boyfriend and another male friend. The woman was allowed to make a phone call, and a short time later her boyfriend turned himself in, saying, "I just want to get this off my chest." After police questioned him, the man admitted to committing over 20 armed robberies, including two on the same night at 18th and Ord and Market, another robbery at Mono and 19th streets, and a purse snatch on the 3000 block of Market where the suspect smashed a car window, took the driver's purse, and accidentally left his handgun on the seat of the car. The man also gave the name of his accomplice, and a warrant for his arrest was immediately issued.

Investigators believe the trio may be responsible for over 30 robberies within the last five months. Anyone with information regarding other robberies is encouraged to call (415) 553-1201.

Thawed logic

Safeway, Diamond Heights Boulevard, September 15, 8 a.m.: A Dakota truck pulling out of Safeway's parking lot struck a Ford sedan traveling northbound. The male driver of the truck failed to stop. The driver of the Ford, honking, followed the man to Church Street where he pulled into a garage and shut the door behind him. A short time later, police knocked on the door and the man admitted to leaving the scene but said he had a good reason: "I had a bunch of frozen stuff from Safeway in the car." The man was given a citation and a court date to appear.

Out on a limb

100 block of Eureka, September 15, 3:35 p.m.: A woman who lives in an apartment on Eureka Street heard a loud noise coming from the side of the building. She looked out and saw a pair of legs dangling from the window below hers. When she yelled down, the legs answered, "It's okay, ask Joe." Knowing that a "Joe" didn't live there, the woman called 911. Responding police gained entry to the apartment but didn't find the suspect. Another neighbor told officers that the same man had knocked earlier and asked if she had a room for rent, perhaps to find out if anyone was home. The suspect is described as a clean shaven Hispanic male, 20-30 years old, well built with short wavy hair, wearing dark clothing.

Not so lucky

100 block of Collingwood, September 15, 7:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.: A man came home from work to find the front door to his apartment unlocked and his CD player, cassette recorder, and two speakers missing from his living room. Police determined the burglar gained entry through a hallway window that faces Collingwood. There are no known suspects, although this may be the same suspect as the attempted Eureka Street burglary. ▼

FDA rejects blood ban revision, blood needed

by Terry Beswick

Got blood? Call the American Red Cross today at 1-800-GIVE-LIFE. That is, unless you're a gay or bisexual male.

According to Red Cross President Dr. Bernadine Healy, at least one man is literally dying for some blood in South Carolina, where he has had to take a pass on three pending liver transplants over the summer for lack of enough blood supplies to make it through the operation.

"The nation's blood supply is in danger," Healy appealed to the nation for the second time in two months on Tuesday, September 19. "We need help now."

In other states elective surgeries have been postponed and the country has less than three days supply of blood on hand, declared Healy, who headed up the National Institutes of Health during the Bush presidency. The Red Cross collects half of the blood used by hospitals in the U.S.

Yet while hospitals in Los Angeles and Philadelphia are postponing surgeries, the Red Cross has been leading a crusade against easing a federal ban on gay and bisexual men who wish to donate blood to help ease the chronic shortages.

The Reagan-era ban, it should be noted, doesn't apply to all gay men — only those who have had sex with another man since 1977.

Dr. Rebecca Haley, interim chief medical officer for the American Red Cross, testified before the FDA Blood Products Advisory Committee hearings on September 14 and 15 that "because of the risk of introducing HIV-positive blood into the national blood supply," it could not support taking blood from men who have "engaged in homosexual behavior during the past 24 years."

"If the Public Health Service could assure us that introducing previously deferred donors into the pool could be accommodated without increasing risk, the American Red Cross would support appropriate actions to do so," Haley said.

The panel, which previously had been unanimous in its support of the existing ban, again sided with the Red Cross — though this time by a margin of one vote. The 13-member advisory panel voted 7 to 6 to err on the side of caution and retain the 1985 policy that bars even many priests and former Boy Scouts from doing their civic duty.

"We brought this question before the committee, and at this point we will consider the discussion," said Lenore Gelb, spokeswoman for the FDA, adding that the agency has no specified timeline for reviewing the decision. "We often follow their advice, but we're not bound by it."

On the table at the hearing in Gaithersburg, Maryland, were proposals to narrow the current policy, which covers all sexual acts between men, to exclude only those would-be donors who have had man-to-man within the last year, or within the last five years.

FDA medical officer Andrew Dayton testified last week that "introduction of a five-year floating deferral for male-to-male sexual behavior, even using conservative estimates, would result in minimal increased morbidity in the blood supply by HIV," suggesting that perhaps 1.7 additional units of blood might make it through screening systems due to worker error.

Although the Red Cross notes that the current ban is opposed by the gay community, it is also opposed by the American Association of Blood Banks, of which the Red Cross is a member, and America's Blood Centers, an association of community blood banks which supply the other half of the nation's blood not supplied by the Red Cross. Both organizations have advocated for eliminating the ban, and creating a deferral period that would apply to the men who have had sex with men within the year prior to a donation.

"This modification should have no detrimental effect on the risk of transmitting HIV through transfusion or the safety of the blood supply," said Dr. Louis Katz, in his testimony before the committee vote. Katz is chairperson of the AABB's Transfusion Transmitted Disease Committee.

According to the Red Cross, only 8 million Americans donate blood, just 5 percent of eligible donors. And while donations are decreasing about 1 percent a year, demand for blood is increasing by 1 percent a year.

"This policy is ridiculous and is not based on science or fact," commented San Francisco Supervisor Mark Leno, who has argued against the ban for over a year. "There is no good reason why HIV-negative gay men cannot offer their blood."

Lisa Block, a spokeswoman for the Blood Centers of the Pacific headquartered in San Francisco, said that her organization also supports a one-year deferral.

"It's just kind of ironic that the Red Cross was so adamantly opposed to any change, and now they've issued this appeal," she said. ▽

Rosenkrantz's parole dashed at last minute

by Ed Walsh

Robert Rosenkrantz's parole hopes last week were dashed just seconds before he would have walked free for the first time since he was arrested for killing his basher 15 years ago.

Last Thursday, September 14, a Superior Court judge in Los Angeles County ordered Rosenkrantz's release. The ruling was in response to a complaint filed by Rosenkrantz's attorney, Rowan Klein, who charged the Board of Prison Terms with unfairly delaying the passage of Rosenkrantz's parole order to the governor.

The board was required to submit the order to the governor by August 30. The board said it needed more time to review the paperwork on the case but Klein argued the board was deliberately dragging its feet to delay the governor from having to deal with it.

Last Friday, September 15, Rosenkrantz was told his parole order was final and he was ordered to pack his belongings. The California Men's Colony prison in San Luis Obispo began processing his exit at 2:30 p.m.

Some in the media had already learned of the impending release. An Associated Press photographer and a freelance video photographer had staked out the prison entrance to get a picture of Rosenkrantz leaving.

Rosenkrantz was told he would be walking out of prison at 5 p.m. A parole agent would take him to his parents' house in Calabasas, in rural Los Angeles County.

Reporters in L.A. had already made plans to stake out the Calabasas home. Rosenkrantz, who was convicted of second-degree murder for killing Steve Redman in 1985, would have been the first convicted killer released since Governor Gray Davis took office.

At the last minute, however, a Court of Appeals judge granted the state a temporary stay of parole. The call came "at the stroke of five," according to a state official. Rosenkrantz was told to take his belongings back to his cell and unpack.

"He's never been this close and told to pack his bags," said Rosenkrantz's longtime friend, Scott Seomin. Rosenkrantz was able to phone him from prison last Sunday night.

In earlier interviews with the Bay Area Reporter, Rosenkrantz said that he never tries to get his hopes up because they have been dashed too many times before. Seomin said Rosenkrantz took that approach even when he was told his parole was final.

"He didn't get his hopes up even when he was close," he said. "I think if he gets out he'll always have a real fear that he's going to be ordered to go back to prison. I don't think that even when he's back home having dinner with his parents in the home he grew up in, he'll feel like he's free."

Seomin has kept in touch with Rosenkrantz's parents and phoned them over the weekend. He said they were drained after going through an emotional roller coaster, first learning their son was ordered released last Thursday and then learning late the next day he would be kept in prison.

Although Seomin is the entertainment media director for the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation, GLAAD hasn't been involved in the Rosenkrantz case and Seomin said he was speaking strictly as a friend.

The Court of Appeals is expected to rule within the next two weeks whether to rescind the stay of parole and allow Rosenkrantz's release. Steve Green, assistant secretary for the Youth and Adult Correctional Agency, told the B.A.R. that the state would file a "request for an expedited review" with the court and he expected Klein would do the same.

"We would like to see this resolved soon," said Green.

The Rosenkrantz case has been tied up in court for two years. Both the Los Angeles County Superior Court and the 2nd District Court of Appeals have ruled Rosenkrantz has been unfairly denied parole.

Rosenkrantz was 18 in 1985 when he was confronted by 17-year-old Steve Redman at a high school graduation party he was hosting. Redman burst into the party yelling "faggots," broke Rosenkrantz's nose with a flashlight, and outed him to his parents. A week later, Rosenkrantz confronted Redman with an Uzi and demanded he take back his outing. They argued and Rosenkrantz shot Redman 10 times. He eventually turned himself in and was convicted of second-degree murder and sentenced to 17-years-to-life. ▼

Army smears May at DADT inquiry

by Bob Roehr

A three-member Board of Inquiry of Army officers has recommended that Steve May be dismissed from the reserves for violation of the anti-gay policy known as "Don't Ask, Don't Tell." The decision came on Sunday, September 17, in Los Alamitos, California after 12 hours of hearings. May plans to appeal the decision.

May is a lieutenant in the Army Reserve and a Republican who represents east Phoenix in the Arizona Legislature. He acknowledged he was gay during past elections and in February 1999 during chamber debate on anti-gay legislation. The debate was front-page news in Arizona.

The lieutenant was on "inactive" status with the Army at the time. He was called up to "active" status shortly after the debate, when the military situation in Kosovo began heating up. He has been serving as a weekend warrior ever since. May has had an exemplary record throughout his military career.

On trial

At the inquiry, Army prosecutors charged that May had violated DADT. More damningly, they said he had lied to his commanding officer and misrepresented why he was called to duty, and therefore should be given a general rather than an honorable discharge.

"It was weird," May said in an exclusive interview. "We went in not contesting the facts. And the government spent 12 hours doing two things: one, proving that I am gay, and two, conducting a malicious character assassination without evidence or foundation."

"They said I was trying to pursue my own personal political agenda at the expense of the Army," May said. That charge centered on testimony by May's battalion commander that she saw him on CNN's Larry King Live saying that he had been called up to go to Kosovo.

But when a tape of the program was played, it clearly supported May's version of the event, that he had said only that he had been recalled to active duty during the time of the Kosovo events. Soldiers under May's command testified that he was a good officer who did not inject talk of being gay into his job in the reserves.

The board found that May's inactive military status did leave him subject to DADT and therefore his speech was in violation of those regulations. It ordered him dismissed from the service. However, it found no merit in the Army's malicious claims and therefore ordered an honorable rather than a general discharge.

May's civilian attorney, Christopher Wolf, accused Army prosecutors of "McCarthy-like tactics." He said, "We believe the board ignored the facts and ignored the law."

This decision will have a "chilling effect" on all reservists if it is allowed to stand, said Wolf. "The military can't proscribe the issues which he as an elected official can debate as a state legislator."

Wolf successfully defended Chief Petty Officer Timothy McVeigh two years ago when the Navy blatantly disregarded the law, seized McVeigh's America Online account, and tried to drum him out of the service.

May's inquiry was closed to the public and the media. "I can't wait until I get the transcripts out there so they can see what bastards the government was," said May. "They were so vindictive. Never before had my conduct, performance, professionalism, loyalty, or my integrity been questioned," he said.

"I cannot believe that my government, my Army would treat me that way," said May. His voice was tired from the stress of the weekend events and another day spent dealing with the media. That included a return appearance on Larry King Live, this time opposite Oliver North.

Gays don't undermine Aussie military, study says

by Cynthia Laird

The attention of the world is now on Sydney, Australia with the running of the Olympic Games that started last Friday. But for gays and lesbians in the military, evidence from Down Under suggests that being openly gay does not affect a military from fully functioning.

Fresh on the heels of the U.S. Army's inquiry into gay reservist Steve May (see story above), a new study of gays and lesbians serving in the Australian military has found no discernible effects of allowing homosexuals to serve and evidence suggests that lifting the ban in Australia has contributed to improvements in the working environment.

Australia lifted its ban on gays and lesbians serving in its armed forces in 1992. In 1993 the United States instituted the "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy prohibiting gays and lesbians from serving openly in this country.

The Australian study was written by Aaron Belkin and Jason McNichol. Belkin is the director of the Center for the Study of Sexual Minorities in the Military at the University of California, Santa Barbara. McNichol is a doctoral candidate in sociology at the University of California, Berkeley.

Belkin said he sent the study to Pentagon officials.

"The Pentagon claims that lifting the American gay ban would undermine the military," Belkin said. "Data from 23 nations that allow known gays to serve, including Australia, Israel, and Britain suggest that the lifting of a gay ban does not jeopardize military performance."

Prior to lifting the ban, Aus-

House 'passes' hate crimes bill

by Bob Roehr

Federal hate crimes legislation inched a bit closer to enactment with a 232 to 192 vote by the U.S. House of Representatives on September 13. It was not a direct vote on that legislation but a nonbinding resolution to instruct House negotiators to accept what the Senate had passed in June as an amendment to the Department of Defense authorization bill.

"This monumental vote represents enormous progress and has brought a comprehensive hate crime law within our grasp," said Elizabeth Birch, executive director of the Human Rights Campaign, the principal advocate for the legislation.

"We have waited a long time for this victory, but our work is not complete," said Elizabeth Toledo, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force. She urged continued pressure on Congress.

Efforts to pass hate crimes legislation received a boost on August 29, when Representative Bill McCollum (R-Florida) endorsed the measure in a series of high-profile news conferences in Florida and further communications with the Republican leadership in the House.

The conservative chairman of the House Judiciary Committee Subcommittee on Crime is running for the Senate in Florida.

Kevin Ivers, Log Cabin Republicans political director, said that McCollum was key to the vote. "I don't think that those 41 Republicans [who voted for the measure] would have gone against their party conservatives if it was just liberals like Barney Frank and John Conyers" supporting the measure. McCollum gave Republicans political cover on the right, and is taking flack for it from social conservative groups.

"He certainly is delivering," said Winnie Stachelberg, political director of HRC, recounting McCollum's ongoing efforts. "All of this is great, but if it doesn't ensure that a bill is enacted at the end of the year, it amounts to posturing and positioning and not much else."

Those who oppose the legislation come from both the left and right of the political spectrum. They have been quick to condemn hate violence but argue that existing laws are more than adequate. They point to the very examples used by advocates of hate crimes legislation — Matthew Shepard, James Byrd, Billy Jack Gaither — where the killers were fully prosecuted under existing state laws and federal legislation would not have added to the penalty.

Furthermore, many gays, such as columnist Andrew Sullivan, believe that anti-hate legislation impinges upon freedom of thought, creating "thought crimes." Activist Bill Dobbs on the left, and traditional conservatives on the right, see it as a worrisome extension of federal police power into an area that is historically local jurisdiction.

Most observers believe that the hate crimes amendment will not survive conference negotiations between House and Senate versions of the Defense authorization bill.

Ivers said it is "because of the germaneness issue more than anything else" — the amendment does not deal with Defense Department matters. Congressional leaders will use that argument to strip away unrelated amendments by social conservatives as well as those from liberals.

He laments that this "was used as a partisan wedge attack strategy by [Dick] Gephardt, [Ted] Kennedy, and the White House" for political purposes. He believes a more bipartisan approach would have brought "more progress." ▼

House routs gays
for Boy Scouts

by Bob Roehr

The U.S. House of Representatives delivered a slap to the face of the gay and lesbian Americans on September 13 by the stunning margin of 363 to 11 to not revoke the charter of the Boy Scouts of America. Some 51 representatives voted "present" to protest the procedural manner in which it was handled. The community's Washington-based political organizations tried to downplay the outcome.

The BSA's federal charter dates from 1916 and is symbolic, carrying no financial benefits. The bill to revoke it was proposed in light of the Boy Scouts successfully prevailing before the Supreme Court, which earlier this year upheld their right to discriminate against gays, atheists, and others.

In introducing the bill on July 19, Representative Lynn Woolsey (D-California) said, "To me there is nothing charitable or patriotic about intolerance and it's not a value we want our children to learn." Revoking the charter would "send a clear message that Congress does not support intolerance."

Only eight representatives joined Woolsey in co-sponsoring the measure. The three openly gay or lesbian members of Congress were not among them. Everyone expected it to die a quiet death in the closing days of the session.

But on September 12, social conservative Asa Hutchinson (R-Arkansas) moved to suspend the rules and vote on Woolsey's bill. The debate was fast and furious, with Cass Ballenger (R-North Carolina) defending the Scouts as being "as American as apple pie and baseball."

Woolsey readily conceded that point. "And that is why I believe scouting should be available to all boys, not just to some boys." Most litical director of the Human Rights Campaign. But she conceded that they did not lobby on this issue because of the last minute way it was brought forward.

"I just don't think that there is a legislative fix," she added. And, "I don't think that calling on the president to step down from his highly ceremonial position" is the right way to go either. She indicated that they were unlikely to use this vote in formulating their con-liberals, such as John Conyers (D-Michigan), focused their comments on the "political stunt" of bringing the bill to the floor with no hearings or committee vote.

But the vote took place the following afternoon. None of the openly gay Representatives voted to revoke the Boy Scout's charter. Jim Kolbe (R-Arizona) supported its retention while Barney Frank (D-Massachusetts) and Tammy Baldwin (D-Wisconsin) voted present.

Scouting the HRC position

"The Boy Scouts should not be able to discriminate against anyone," said Winnie Stachelberg, po-gressional ratings.

Instead, Stachelberg focused on the "last minute ploy by the House Republican leadership" to vote on the bill, which was proposed by a liberal Democrat.

She defended the "present" vote as objecting to not going through the normal committee process. Yet she had no such reservations for using similar extra-procedural tactics to "pass" hate crimes legislation that same afternoon.

Stachelberg pointed to pressure being brought to bear on local United Way campaigns and corporations "to rethink their

Stop "ACT UP San Francisco"

As people living with HIV, and as other concerned members of the community, we condemn and call for an end to "ACT UP San Francisco's" violent and destructive attacks upon HIV prevention, care and treatment efforts. Their attacks have shut down community treatment forums, stopped HIV educational outreach, and threatened the continuation of services for people with HIV/AIDS. Their harmful actions cripple our ability to end the epidemic.

"ACT UP San Francisco" is threatening our lives.

For decades we have struggled to build our community and to assure our future, while combating HIV/AIDS. We cherish and rely upon our freedom of speech and our freedom to assemble.

"ACT UP San Francisco" members and their allies - AIDS denialists who have hijacked the name of activists who used that name here in the '80s and early '90s - are entitled to their anti-scientific beliefs that HIV is harmless, that treatments are poison, and that safe sex is a homophobic campaign. But when they wage war directly on San Franciscans living with AIDS—

- by sending packets to every member of Congress urging them to slash all funding for programs that support people living with AIDS,
- by taking out ads in Washington, DC newspapers demanding that Congress completely defund the Ryan White CARE Act and the AIDS Drug Assistance Program,
- by engaging in vicious smear campaigns and threats of violence against people living with AIDS, AIDS advocates, and providers of AIDS services —

It's time that "ACT UP San Francisco" is held accountable!

ACT UP/NY, Philadelphia, and Paris continue to thrive, do good work, are not affiliated with "ACT UP San Francisco" and do not condone its tactics.

It is completely unacceptable that "ACT UP San Francisco" continues to intimidate and harass others who believe differently. In recent months:

- They have violently disrupted educational forums sponsored by Project Inform, STOP AIDS Project, Survive AIDS, and the HIV Prevention Planning Council (HPPC). Their intimidating tactics have literally shut down community dialogue.
- They have physically attacked some of us. The rest of us find these attacks intolerable and we will no longer stand by silently.

"ACT UP San Francisco's" behavior threatens the health of our community.

Their campaign of lies and propaganda arms and gives comfort to our enemies. They intimidate good people into remaining silent.

Don't stand by silently.

The original ACT-UP taught us that SILENCE = DEATH.

Stand with us in confronting this destructive assault on our community.
We need you to take three actions:

1 BOYCOTT 2 CALL 3 WRITE

"ACT UP San Francisco" makes money from us through selling marijuana. If you need marijuana, we ask you to NOT purchase it from "ACT UP San Francisco." There are multiple clubs where you can buy it. A list of other medical marijuana buyers clubs can be accessed at www.surviveaids.org.

Contact the Mayor, your Supervisors, and the District Attorney. Demand that they prosecute fully all violent behavior, and protect HIV educators from personal harassment and intimidation.

Willie L. Brown, Jr.

Board of Supervisors
(415) 554-5184

Terence Hallinan

Every time you read of a new disruption or see one of their unprincipled character attacks against members of the community, write a letter to the editor of the publication. Let them know you need safety and treatment information, not AIDS denial or personal attacks.

It's time to take back the dialogue over how to best respond to the epidemic in each of our communities. It's time to take back the proud history of activism, community education and service that many early activists and people with AIDS gave us. If you want to join us and sign on, please call 415-252-8306 or email us at BoycottACTUPSf@aol.com.

Steve May

The smear campaign has only strengthened his resolve to see this through. The decision will be appealed to his commanding general, who is likely to act in 30-90 days. A subsequent appeal to the secretary of the Army and the president seems inevitable.

Congressional voices

A year ago, Representatives Barney Frank (D-Massachusetts) and Tom Campbell (R-California), in a letter joined by about 150 other members of Congress, wrote to President Clinton urging that prosecution of May be dropped.

"We are writing because we as elected representatives believe strongly in that principle embodied in the 'speech and debate clause' of the American Constitution which seeks to extend full protection to members of legislative bodies from any sanction for comments they legitimately make in the course of legislative debate," the letter stated.

As commander in chief, Clinton had both the power and legal rationale to stop the Army's harassment of May. He did nothing.

On September 14, Arizona Republican Congressman John Shadegg wrote to the Army officer in charge of prosecuting May urging that he "terminate proceedings" against the lieutenant. Shadegg said it "violate[s] his constitutional immunity under the Arizona State Constitution and the Speech & Debate Clause of Article I, Section 6 of the United States Constitution."

He cited a series of legal rulings on the issue, including the 1998 Supreme Court decision in Bogan v. Scott-Harris. The court began its decision writing: "It is well established that federal, state, and regional legislators are entitled to absolute immunity from civil liability for their legislative activity."

Shadegg concluded, "For the sake of the representative democracy established by the Constitution, the [Army's] Board [of Inquiry] is prohibited from disciplinary action against Stephen May for his participation in the legislative process."

Reaction

Stacey Sobel, legal director of the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network, said the board's decision "demonstrates that the policy does not work. This sends the wrong message to the public about how the Army values the contributions of its people."

"Steve May is not only a model soldier and a model military officer, but a model leader for all Americans," said Rich Tafel, executive director of Log Cabin Republicans.

David Leibowitz, a columnist writing in the Arizona Republic, called May "Too good to serve in the nation's Army. Too valuable a human being to be wasted on an institution that continues to kneel before a few haters and homophobes."

The Arizona Daily Star editorialized: "May's case is an indication of how the policy indiscriminately eliminates good people from the military. But it should be just the other way around. It is the policy that should be eliminated."

The Arizona Republic wrote: "Clinton is reportedly concerned about his legacy. One grand last act could spiff it up considerably. He needs to scrap a policy which May's case now amply proves is not just unworkable, but unjust." ▼

Aussie military

Italian military leaders argued that allowing homosexuals to serve openly would jeopardize recruitment, troop cohesion, and combat effectiveness while also spreading AIDS and encouraging predatory behavior.

Belkin's study laid those nonexistent fears to rest. The peer-reviewed survey reflects an exhaustive inventory of research including in-depth interviews with 18 soldiers, academics, and ministry representatives, as well as reviews of all published material on the topic. Among key findings of "The Effects of Including Gay and Lesbian soldiers in the Australian Defense Forces: Appraising the Evidence," are:

- Senior officials, commanders, and military scholars within the Australian Defense Forces consistently appraise the lifting of the ban as a successful policy change that has contributed to greater equity and effective working relationships within the ranks. Gay soldiers and commanders have successfully served in recent active deployment in East Timor.
- Senior officials, commanders, and scholars report that there has been no overall pattern of disruption to the military. However, some individual units have reported disruptions that were resolved successfully through normal management procedures.

- Recruitment and retention rates have not suffered as a result of the policy change.

- Although lifting the ban did not undermine military performance, gay and lesbian soldiers have had difficulty obtaining domestic partner benefits for their spouses.

The study is available on the Web at www.gaymilitary.ucs.edu. ▼ salsa, and dance music that appeals to practically everyone.

San Francisco's Leather Pride Week kicked off last Sunday with the Leather Pride Walk 2000 which began at Daddy's bar and wound its way to the Eagle Tavern. Over $32,000 was raised for the AIDS Emergency Fund. Immediately after the walk, at least six of the 13 SOMA Bare Chest Calendar 2001 men were auctioned off for dinner dates and other goodies and another $5,000 was raised. The generosity of all who participated is only an indication of what SMMILE will raise this year for several organizations.

It is estimated by those who keep track of such things that the influx of tourists for the Folsom Street Fair adds at least $5 million to the coffers of businesses, hotels, restaurants, and specialty shops in the city. The bars are jam-packed and San Francisco's economy bulges at the seams. It is no wonder that the city of San Francisco is supportive of all these tourist dollars. If you look at the light poles along Folsom Street, you will notice the Leather Pride flags on both sides of the street, a gift from the Hotel Tax Fund.

So leather pride is alive and well in San Francisco as it has been since the concept was initiated. Security at the Folsom Street Fair is a priority and medical personnel will be standing by in case of emergencies. Dress comfortably and be prepared to witness the "Kinkiest Show On Earth." ▼

nian system, and was a school teacher in Oakland, San Francisco, and Union City.

Born in Taiwan and fluent in Mandarin Chinese, Wan is a member of the Oakland Chinatown Chamber of Commerce and the chair of East Bay Asian American Voter Education. He spent the last seven years as a finance attorney, advising numerous public agencies in financing and developing public infrastructure, open space, enterprise, and housing. And, as an openly gay man and self-identified environmentalist, Wan has said that his grassroots loyalties will continue to play a major role in his decisions.

"I bring a new voice to the council," said Wan, and indeed as a gay environmentalist, Wan does just that. How this will play out for City Council candidate Rebecca Kaplan remains to be seen.

Kaplan, running with the Green Party, is an open lesbian hoping to win the at-large seat now occupied by Henry Chang. While Wan has certainly taken the novelty away from having a queer on the council, Kaplan said she still expects to win her runoff in November, and called Wan "a competent, articulate young man." Her only criticism about Wan's appointment, she said, was that the process should have been open to voters. Kaplan and many others are supporting the upcoming ballot Measure I, which calls for special elections instead of appointments to fill City Council vacancies.

Wan becomes the third openly gay city councilmember in the East Bay, joining Kriss Worthington in Berkeley and Kevin Dowling in Hayward. ▼ tion into the mainstream is in some ways good, "because we are part of the mainstream," he decried the corporatization of the Pride Parade and wants to create new queer events to celebrate our specialness. "We need every excuse possible for difference and creativity," he said, "amidst the barrage of conformist messages we face every day." He proposes a queer Mardi Gras season in the fall featuring smaller-scale, nighttime neighborhood parades and celebrations. Salomon—who moved to San Francisco on October 6, 1989, the night of the infamous Castro police riot—said the queer community still needs to address the fact that "the cops treat us differently, especially tranny folks."

'Build, build, build'

The 11-year resident both lives and works in the South of Market District he's trying to represent on the San Francisco Board of Supervisors. He described the city's housing policy as "whiplash policy by initiative rather than a progressive plan," and said he would "declare a housing emergency, institute a moratorium on evictions, and build, build, build."

While many candidates oppose new development, Salomon believes people should decide what gets built in their own neighborhoods. He thinks some areas South of Market are well suited for low-income and non-luxury, market-rate housing development. He supports Proposition L dealing with office development and live-work controls. He calls live-work lofts "the most inefficient use of space possible," and believes they should be classified as regular housing, noting that the dilapidated Bessie Carmichael School sits in the midst of lofts that are not required to pay education taxes.

Salomon also favors Proposition N, dealing with limitations on TICs and condominium conversions. Salomon is renter who was recently displaced and is currently looking to buy a home. He believes that the city should encourage home ownership, but not at the cost of depleting rental stock. "Rental housing was the drawbridge I followed into San Francisco," he said, "and I would never raise it to close off that avenue for other refugees."

Salomon is currently employed by a small start-up computer company. Working for a dot-com company, he said, has let him "cut through the hype and see what really goes on in the industry." He said there is "a wage pyramid in dot-com sector, and most folks are at bottom," noting that many dot-com workers are long-term San Francisco residents who are in many cases themselves

Unless you are one of those older pack-rats who still has a stash of out-of-this-world vintage 1970s garb, a quick shopping trip to second-hand stores and even contemporary retro fashion stores is highly recommended. And even if the enormous pointed shirt collars of a quarter-century ago aren't quite beautiful to you, whether you identify as gay, straight, lesbian, bisexual, transgender, or queer, there's nothing like scoring that long-sought-after pair of groovy hip-huggers featuring must-have mega-bell-bottoms, vintage patchwork, and extra-wide belt loops to accommodate the all-important coordinating high-gloss plastic belt.

"We shouldn't care about the length of his hair or the color of his skin. Don't worry about what shows from without, but the love that lives within," sang Ray Stevens in his 1970 hit, "Everything is Beautiful."

Pilecki agrees.

"We continue to work toward Janie's vision of creating a safe world where everyone—gay and straight alike—is free to be fully who they are," she said.

A brief overview of AIDS in Asia

by Phillip Alden, Survive
AIDS Writers Pool

Looking at AIDS in Asia can be overwhelming. The Asian continent consists of a multitude of countries which include the islands of Indonesia, India, the Philippines, India, Nepal, Thailand, and China among others. Half of the world's population lives in Asia, and it also has some of the fastest birthrate countries on Earth. There are hundreds of cultures and dozens of languages.

According to UNAIDS, there are more than 6 million people in Asia living with AIDS, and dying from HIV/AIDS. For the most part Asian governments are loath to admit that AIDS even exists. The government of Nepal, for example, states that there are only 77 people in the country with AIDS, while the military government in Burma claims that there is no AIDS epidemic in their country. India alone has more than 4 million people infected.

According to UNAIDS, China has a little over 400,000 infected people, but with a population of 1.25 billion people that figure has to be low.

enced our HIV prevention materials – as a result, people miss the message or turn their backs on condoms or clean needles."

There is little confidentiality regarding HIV testing and disclosure, and this lack of safety is a severe barrier to getting tested. Across the continent families and communities shun their members who test positive, this behavior ranges from being kicked out of homes to murdering the sick person.

The humanitarian group Doctors Without Borders (Médecins Sans Frontières) calls AIDS a "disease of the poor" because like so many other places the disease hits the impoverished communities the hardest. In almost everywhere in the world, the wealthy and powerful can get access to the medical care and antiviral drugs. The poor cannot. Asians view Western Europeans and Americans as the most fortunate because of the quality of medical care they receive as a matter of course.

In China, the family of a person who becomes infected may talk to them or contact them, out of fear. The shops refused to sell to them. Instead, overnight, the shopkeepers would leave what they wanted at their door, secretly."

For those in Asia who do find treatment, they don't necessarily have a much better prognosis. Lack of drugs and medical equipment is so prevalent across the continent that most patients stand little chance of surviving. In rare cases a patient may have access to one or two antivirals and a few drugs to treat opportunistic infections, but a steady, reliable supply is almost unheard of.

What drives the mortality rate is lack of effective and reliable medical care. Because so many people in Asia are very poor, drugs are, for the most part, hopelessly out of reach. There is a trade war brewing between the American and Western European pharmaceutical companies and the governments of less developed countries.

In Thailand there have been demonstrations calling for local production for ddI, (Videx) which is made by Bristol-Myers Squibb. The Thai government attempted to negotiate with BMS so they could start producing ddI without a license, but BMS refused to offer a realistic alternative. If the Thai government tries to produce ddI without the blessing of BMS they would face stiff trade sanctions from the U.S. that could cripple the country's slow return toward economic recovery.

Western activists working in Asia have to contend both with ineffective national governments and multiple cultures. The former might be easier than the latter. Western activists cannot simply walk into the capital of an Asian country and engage in the kind of in-your-face demonstrations that were so effective in the United States. Asian cultures in general find that kind of activism shocking, and initiating such attack could do more harm than good. Westerners first need to familiarize themselves with the people and the culture of a given area before planning how to best fight the disease. Understanding opens the door to compassion, and those are two of the best tools activists can utilize to ease the plight of the millions of Asians fighting HIV/AIDS. ▼

are very poor, drugs are, for the most part, hopelessly out of reach.

The majority of infections are among heterosexuals and injection-drug users, and most preventative action takes place among IV drug users and sex workers. Since these are not particularly well-loved groups among the general populous, they receive little sympathy and compassion. Some Asian governments have instituted a "100 percent condom use" policy, but offer most sex workers an additional $10 or $20 and they'll agree to forgo the condom.

What almost every Asian culture has in common is a deep sense of shame, and these social moors may be contributing to the spread of AIDS. Suzana Murni, an Indonesian PWA, wrote in an article for the July issue of POZ magazine about the deep sense of shame that is placed upon people with HIV/AIDS. "Shame makes it easy to save face by blaming those who are weaker. Shame has influbecome outcasts in their own community if it becomes common knowledge. Doctors and nurses sometimes refuse to touch a person with HIV/AIDS, and the patient may have to try a number of medical treatment centers before finding one that will care for them. Sometimes they don't find anyone who will help them, and if they're young, they can become sexually exploited simply to survive. If they are old and/or seriously ill their prognosis is bleak.

In the same issue of POZ, an anonymous author writing from China tells another story. "There was a young lady who got the problem, [symptomatic AIDS] and when she returned to her hometown – a small village in the countryside – her family got in big trouble. Very soon, this lady died, both because of the disease and because of the terror. After her death, her family was not able to lead a normal life. People would not that helps place HIV-positive persons on jobs.

Tighe was born in Portsmouth, Virginia and raised in New Hampshire. Many friends, family, and his cats, Rodan and Paris, survive him.

A celebration of his life will be held Saturday, September 23, 2000 at the San Francisco Church of Religious Science, 280 Claremont Blvd., at 2 p.m. In lieu of flowers, contributions can be made in Tighe's honor to the AIDS Memorial Grove or the San Francisco Zen Center.

Jack Love Sullivan

Jack Love Sullivan, age 54, died in a car accident in San Francisco, California, on August 20, 2000. At the time, Jack was enduring complications from a long illness with AIDS.

He was preceded in death by parents John and Gertrude Sullivan and is survived by sisters Patricia Sullivan, Kathy Schones, and Mary Kendall of the twin cities of Minnesota, and brother Jerry Sullivan of Tucson, Arizona, and their spouses. He is also survived by nine nieces and nephews and four great nieces and nephews, as well as his extended family of friends and acquaintances in San Francisco and various other parts of the world.

Jack grew up in Pine River and International Falls, Minnesota, and graduated from the University of New Mexico in 1969. He received a masters degree in education from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, Maryland in 1972 and worked as a teacher in Minnesota.

AIDS-related complications. He had been the Executive Director of Ayurveda Health & Educational Resources of San Francisco. He was also the Executive Director of Positive Resources, a nonprofit agency

Jack moved to San Francisco in 1975 and worked as a writer, holistic health and meditation teacher, and Tarot specialist. His life in San Francisco was as colorful as the city itself. He will be remembered fondly as the man wearing all purple attire who helped countless people get sober during his 12 years in the rooms of NA and AA. He would often be found late at night at the Cafe Flore sipping a latte and reading the latest novel. I'm sure his spirit will still be in that Cafe Garden he took so much solace in.

The family requests that any memorial donations be made to the San Francisco AIDS Foundation, 995 Market Street, San Francisco, CA 94103.

George Velasquez

May 28, 1958 — August 19, 2000

George passed away at his mother's home in Simi Valley, California. He had moved to his mother's home from San Francisco in May. George will be remembered in various communities. He moved to

San Francisco from Southern California in the early 1990s and worked as an office manager at 18th Street Services (now New Leaf). He left in 1997 to work at the AIDS Health Project. With clients and colleagues in both jobs, George was known for his quick and endearing humor, and his professionalism. His compassion also came through as a volunteer, when George visited people with AIDS in hospice setting.

His activity in the recovery community extended into volunteer efforts of planning numerous Living Sober conferences. And he played in the gay and lesbian softball league. Survivors include his mother, Helen, and a niece, both in Simi Valley; other family in Southern California; and his long-time friend and roommate, Lee. To his family and friends, he is missed, and remembered for his humor, gentleness, and love.

support of the Boy Scouts" as "a very smart tact for us to take."

She praised state and local governments that have or are reevaluating their support of the Boy Scouts, often as the result of political pressure. But she was unwilling to apply that same pressure to the federal government.

Stachelberg claimed not to have read Attorney General Janet Reno's statement that allows federal support for the Boy Scout Jamboree and other activities to continue. Reno seemingly foreclosed further discussion of the matter.

Daniel McGlinchey, political director of National Stonewall Democrats and a member of Barney Frank's congressional staff, said, "A federal charter is totally meaningless and Congress doesn't even grant them anymore." A "present" vote "means I'm not playing your game."

Criticism

"The people who voted for the BSA really voted for bigotry," said Scott Cozza. He is president of Scouting For All, the organization that proposed the charter revoking measure to Woolsey. "It shows that we have a long way to go." Cozza is urging continued education on the issue at the local level.

Kevin Ivers, political director of Log Cabin Republicans, declined to comment on Kolbe's vote until after he had a chance to speak with the congressman.

He said that lobbying on the issue was untenable "when the Democratic leadership, the White House, and the Gore campaign refused to take a position that was gay positive."

Ivers asked, "If Barney Frank is going to talk about being outraged, why did he vote present? Why didn't he have the guts to vote no? Or vote yes? One way or the other."

"If members of Congress knew in their gut that discrimination against gay people was wrong, it wouldn't have taken lobbying to get their vote," said Ken Sherrill. "People would have been repelled by it."

Sherrill, a professor of political science at Hunter College in Manhattan as well as a gay and democratic activist, said that by voting "present," Frank and Baldwin "gave cover to a lot of people who lacked the courage to do the right thing."

"You have to ask the hard questions to make them part of the record," said Bob Summersgill, president of the Gay and Lesbian Activists Alliance of Washington, D.C.

Failure to include the Boy Scouts vote in its congressional ratings "tells me that HRC is not prepared to reward courage," said Sherrill. "It is like giving a slap on the wrist to an upstanding member of society who has committed a heinous crime. You did something terrible but we are not going to punish you because you are too respected." ▼

Scandalnavians

by Jim Provenzano

In a previous column I mentioned four openly gay Olympic participants.

Recap: there are now six, including a Dane, a Norwegian, and a Swede.

The London Independent reports that two lesbian partners are competing in women's handball. Huzzah!

On Sunday in Sydney, Camilla Andersen and her Danish handball team played Mia Hundvin (left) and Norway in what Outsports.com called possibly an Olympic first — an openly lesbian same-sex couple competing against each other at the Games.

Hundvin and her Norwegian teammates, the gold medal favorite, won a semi-final at 19-17.

Andersen, 27, and Hundvin, 23, a lesbian couple who became registered partners in Denmark earlier this year, were not shy about mentioning their relationship, particularly in speaking out against anti-gay bias in granting artificial insemination rights to lesbian couples.

Olympics hoohahs were eager to shut them up.

The Independent reported last Wednesday that the Olympic Information Service, the official news outlet of the Sydney games, censored the couple's relationship in their biography, when Danish team officials demanded that they cut the mention of their relationship.

Danish officials also wanted to delete the mention of badminton champion Camilla Martin having posed nude for a men's magazine.

The Aussies, of course, have "no worries" about nudity, as last week's Sports Complex proved.

Almost a hundred Australian jocks posed for The Sydney Dream, an oversized coffee table book.

Jimmy mac

Another gay athlete is out this year, men's diving's most tattooed jock, Swedish diver Jimmy Sjodin, trained here in the U.S. Sjodin was a hot star of the Arizona Wildcats' men's diving team and took second place in the World Cup. Sjodin placed 14th in Atlanta's 1996 Olympics in men's 10-meter platform.

Among his four skin inks are a tribal thang on his lower back, a left shoulder Griffin, Our Lady adorns his thigh, and a secret spot where only close inspection can show a single word: "suecia."

"I don't think a person is able to come out and tell people he's gay until he feels the people he's surrounded by truly care about him," he told Metrosource magazine.

He also said he doesn't think diving is more gay than other sport, just that its recent best athletes happened to be gay, and stylish; beyond the Olympics, Sjodin's career in fashion (he's a UCLA advertising grad) should be promising.

With 25 Swedish National Championships as part of his accomplishments, here's hoping he'll enjoy future success as one of several openly gay male divers.

Whether he's diving or not this year remains a question for this columnist, whose searches on all major sports media sites revealed a barrage of computer stalling Javascript, and only ethnocentric U.S. stats. Ridiculous. Scores from 1996 for Sjodin are available on a few sites. Any Swedes out there know more?

David Pichler is competing in platform diving as well as men's synch with Troy Dumais, who has a girlfriend, we're told. So this is mixed men's synch diving, perhaps.

Patrick Jeffrey coaches Pichler, while Greg Louganis has retired from the sport. Bruce Hayes currently lives in Atlanta. Other lesbian and gay

Dynamic duo: Pichler and Dumais are in synch

Olympians to join Camilla Andersen and Mia Hudvin include:

Billie Jean King (below), who is coaching the U.S. women's tennis team, and

Amelia Mauresmo, French tennis star, stands to rack up some medals on King's team.

King revolutionized women's sports by developing numerous women's sports foundations, and being the first out lesbian athlete of her era. She was the first female athlete to win over $100,000 prize money in a single season. Billie Jean King spoke out for women and their right to earn comparable money in tennis and other sports. Her constant lobbying and commitments have broken many barriers.

King established the first successful women's professional tennis tour. She founded tennis clinics for underprivileged children. For her contributions to tennis as president of Tennis-America, King was awarded the National Service Bowl, and this year received a Lifetime Achievement Award from GLAAD.

Mauresmo is the first player on the women's tour since Martina Navratilova to talk publicly about being a lesbian. She said she moved to Saint Tropez last year to live with girlfriend Sylvie Bourdon, 31, who cheered her from the players' box at the Australian Open this week.

"At last, I'm clear in my head, clear in my mind, clear in my life, and it shows in my tennis," Mauresmo said in speaking of her decision to be open about her life with Bourdon.

Bourdon said it was "absolutely natural" for them to be open, rather than hide anything.

"We both said, 'Let's go,' and I think it's much better that way," Bourdon said. "It makes life simpler. ... Acknowledging this relationship makes her stronger in her own life and on the court."

The controversy last year arose when Martina Hingis was asked after the semifinals about the difference between Mauresmo now and when they played last year in a Federation Cup match.

"She's here with her girlfriend. She's half a man," Hingis was reported to have said in German. She later denied having made the comment.

To find absolutely nothing about these or any other gay and lesbian Olympic athletes, visit NBCOlympics.com, USAToday.com, or Gay.com, the "exclusive" Web site of Gay Games VI. Gay.com recently moved to 6th and Market streets in San Francisco, helping to evict several non-profit service agencies in the process, a prime example of their sportsmanlike conduct. ▼

Agenerase

A Study for HIV-Positive People with More than 50 CD4 Cells

If you have a CD4 cell count of more than 50, and have never taken Amprenavir (Agenerase), you and your doctor may be interested in this study. If you have already taken several antiviral drugs and qualify to participate, a "virtual" phenotype test can help choose an effective next regimen.

This study compares standard dose Agenerase to low-dose Agenerase combined with Ritonavir.

This study lasts 24 weeks; Agenerase and laboratory tests are provided free.

Main Requirements:

- Men and non-pregnant women 18 years and older.
- Viral load between 1,000 copies and 100,000 copies.
- No current or previous opportunistic infections except KS.
- No current use of systemic corticosteroids, interleukins or interferons.

For more information, please call: 415-353-6215.

BART gay man

side; in his current race for BART board re-election in November, he has been endorsed by the District 6 Democratic Club, the National Women's Political Caucus, the Harvey Milk and Alice B. Toklas Democratic clubs, the San Francisco League of Conservation Voters, and the Sierra Club, to name just a few supporters. When Supervisor Tom Ammiano ran for mayor last year, Radulovich wrote an entire page for Ammiano's Web site, supporting the candidate's commitment to public transportation. Radulovich has since gained the endorsement of not just Ammiano, but Supervisors Mark Leno, Gavin Newsom, Sue Bierman, and Assemblymembers Shelley and Migden.

And as far as other BART issues are concerned, Radulovich says he has worked hard to get energies focused back toward the core BART system, to fix what we already have.

"We're putting in new cars, and new ticket machines to replace those that have been driving everybody crazy," said Radulovich. "We're starting with Balboa Park, and we're going through, station by station, to increase capacity as well as disabled access."

Radulovich has also worked to change bicycle policies on BART; now, with fewer restrictions, there has been a 200 percent increase in bicyclists' BART use, "which is another thing I'm proud of," he said.

Radulovich, a University of California, Berkeley graduate with a degree in urban planning, is a resident of the Mission and the "first queer ever on the BART board," he was elected in 1996. He was once the youngest elected official in the city until Supervisor Newsom, three months younger, got elected two years ago, after being appointed by Mayor Willie Brown.

BART board members are a part of a nine-member team representing each of the BART districts; Radulovich is running in District 9. His sole opponent is Internet businessman Thomas Damico, a candidate who doesn't seem to be doing much campaigning, according to Radulovich.

"But I still consider this a serious race," he said.

Radulovich seeks re-election so that he can finish what he has started, and, as he puts it, "get the system to reinvest in San Francisco." ▼

being displaced due to high housing costs.

An ardent environmentalist, Salomon, who has been active in Earth First!, believes that "society can only be as healthy as the planet on which we live." He wants the city to institute barriers to automobile use — such as vehicle taxes — and spend more on public transit. "They've turned San Francisco into Manhattan," he lamented, "but forgot to put in the subway." He wants to see a natural gas minibus shuttle connecting the Castro, South of Market, and the Townsend Street Caltrain station. Salomon, who was recently hit by a car while bicycling in the Castro, also wants to make the city more bike-friendly.

Salomon was a member of the original ACT UP/San Francisco in the early 1990s. Today, he said, "AIDS has come full circle — the people who once fought for seats at the table are now fighting to keep others away." He said that some large public institutions such as universities are unaccountable to their clients, and that some nonprofits are playing an inappropriate political role. Some of these institutions, he said, "have become poverty-maintenance organizations that have no interest in solving the underlying causes of poverty."

Salomon calls himself an "AIDS skeptic" and said that "entrenched positions squelch discourse" about issues such as whether HIV is the sole and sufficient cause of AIDS. "Science does not need to be 100 percent certain," he said, "but scientists should be honest about this." Salomon, who said he "learned about HIV and AIDS in bathhouses in Dallas in 1983 and has played safe ever since," favors opening bathhouses in San Francisco because they provide a good atmosphere for promoting hygiene and safer sex.

Salomon favors the decriminalization of medical marijuana, supporting its use from "terminal cancer to after-work stress, wherever it's useful." He supports treatment on demand for drug users and increased funding for San Francisco General Hospital. He wants to protect San Francisco's late night establishments, many of which are located in District 6. He favors campaign finance reform, a tax on soft money, and term limits for lobbyists, who he suggests should be required to wear red clown noses. Salomon supports fellow Green Party candidates Ralph Nader for president and Medea Benjamin for Senate, saying that although "the game is rigged against us," there is no choice but to build a progressive third party. He decries the criminalization of youth and strongly favors more spending for public schools.

In summing up his campaign, Salomon said, "If we want to keep our city habitable, we need to take steps to keep it a sliding scale city where not only the super-rich can live." ▼

I KEEP FORGETTING WHEN TO TAKE MY HIV MEDICATIONS!

A research study of an electronic pager system which reminds HIV positive patients when and how to take their HIV medications.

- For those patients who decide to start a regimen of HIV medications, taking the pills at the proper time and in the correct way is crucial to keeping viral load and side effects down.
- Given that current treatment for HIV can require someone to take up to two dozen pills daily, each with different requirements, it is not surprising that patients have difficulty with taking their medication.
- One study has shown that missing just one out of 20 doses of HIV medication can open the door for resistance and treatment failure.
- Studies repeatedly report that the most common reason for patients not taking their medication is simply "forgetting."
- One half of study patients will be given an electronic alert (which looks just like a pager) which will alarm when it is time for a medication, tell them what medication to take and how to take it.
- All participants in the study get to keep a pager at the end of study
- Compensation also provided for this 2 year long study.

Pectoral erotics

Grooving on the male chest on the eve of Folsom Street Fair

by Curt Sanburn

I have been obsessed with hairy male tits for as long as I can remember. I practically go into a trance when I see a big guy with his shirt off who's got big nipples. I go all dry-mouthed. I can't think straight.

So says William, one of the burgeoning number of "tit men" in the Bay Area and throughout the gay world. He's testifying for his particular sex fetish, one that right now seems to be mainstreaming itself and, in a way, rounding out gay male sexuality.

"I guess I'm really just like any straight guy looking at Pamela What's-her-name," William reflects.

"I've been powerfully attracted to men's chests since I was a child," Bryan, another tit man, says carefully. "The attraction and fixation on men's nipples, as a purely visual stimulant, has developed more in recent years."

He goes on: "I think the subject of male nipple play has been more or less taboo because of the perception that there's something 'feminine' about having some guy nurse on your nipples. But the feel of it is such an overwhelming turn-on that I have no trouble overcoming the reticence."

"My tits are hot-wired to my dick," Bryan explains, "so when hot tit-play leads right to orgasm, I figure it's an all-male response to an all-male experience."

Radical. And interesting, corroborating anecdotal evidence that the male chest and nerve-packed nipple are, for many gay men, a primary site of sexual display, sexual stimulation and sexual release.

Look around. Gay men are no longer shy about the fetish. On any sunny afternoon on Castro Street, a number of men are in tight T-shirts or tank tops calculated to showcase their jutting pec slabs and their enlarged nipples, protuberant and plainly visible beneath the flimsy knit fabric. It's like Spandex pants and cock display; the only difference is that, with a little work, anyone can have big tits.

At this year's intensely sexual, all-shirtless leatherfest, the Dore Alley Fair, held on a warm Sunday in July: hundreds — no, thousands — of leather-framed torpedo tits steering their goateed musclemen owners through the crowd. The

Report from season s First Thursday

What s up at the galleries?

by Will Shank

A strange San Francisco ritual takes place on the first Thursday evening of every month at an innocuous-looking office building in downtown San Francisco. Beginning around 5:30 or 6 p.m., swarms of business people, SoMa alternative types, and art-lovers of all stripes slowly filter into the lobby to wait for a ride in a bank of elevators to the four floors of galleries at 49 Geary Street. For several hours, the elevator doors burst open onto the 2nd, 3rd, 4th or 5th floor of the office tower, and the faithful spill into the corridors. In a sort of vertically stacked art mall, office-like spaces reveal their interiors to be filled with the latest offerings from some of San Francisco's premiere art galleries. And the culture vultures drink it up, along with cheap jug wine (and in at least one exceptionally raucous gallery, hard booze).

On the first Thursday of September, these were among the most viewable installations:

At Fraenkel Gallery, Frish Brandt and Jeffrey Fraenkel have assembled a remarkable group of psychological portraits and self-portraits in the exhibition About Faces, which runs through October 28. The selections run from classic modernism (Stieglitz on O'Keeffe, 1933, and Man Ray on Meret Oppenheim, 1934) to the contemporary and startling, such as Hiroshi Sugimoto's Catherine Parr (1999), which at first glance appears to be another Cindy Sherman impersonation of an English monarch, but which definitely is not. The photos range from Avedon's black-and-white portrait of President Ike in retirement in 1964, to a double view of the battered faces of Por-

Opening up our copy of SF Weekly last week, we were quite perplexed to see a meager one-sentence description of Rob Epstein and Jeffrey Friedman's award-winning new film Paragraph 175, now playing a two-week run at the Castro. A few nagging phone calls (to our anonymous, nagged sources) unearthed this bizarre explanation: the Weekly's entertainment editors don't assign local SF reviewers to cover films that are opening here. As a part of the much-disdained New Times syndicate, the SF Weekly uses reviews by critics in other markets. Unfortunately, Paragraph 175 hadn't yet opened in any other markets where New Times had assigned a critic (though it opened last Wednesday in New York City, with reviews in every major NYC press outlet). The upshot of this is that San Francisco movie-lovers got to read two meandering pages of Robert Wilonsky drooling over Cameron Crowe's Almost Famous, with nary a peep about one of the most important gay films of the year made by two of San Francisco's most esteemed documentarians. Homophobia? Maybe. Evidence of the inherent problems of media conglomeration? No doubt. We thank our lucky stars for the homespun press.

You're my spill

On the self-inflicted injury front, last week Out There took a wrong step in Alamo Square Park (easy to do) and badly twisted our left hoof. The damage meant a few days with our foot up (instead of in our mouth), and also that someone else would just have to go to the Macy's Passport '00 event and ogle the male models in their underpants! It's hard work, the lingerie beat, and we were just in no shape to tackle it.

When our ailing appendage began to heal, however, we did pop in to the Meyerovich Gallery's showing of Picasso's etchings and engravings at the Pan Pacific hotel, if only to make a point. The SF Weekly cover story (same issue which had no space for Paragraph 175, see above) on 20th-century super-artist Bruce Conner last week really ticked us off. Not because Conner is unworthy of the star treatment — see our own cover story, months ago, when the subject was timely. Just that it led off with damaged movie star/art maven Dennis Hopper in a gratuitous slam against old Pablo Picasso, opining that he was the most overrated artist of the century because "Guernica," his masterpiece about the horrors of modern war, had too much of an arty aesthetic for its subject. Uh, hello, Mr. Hopper, War & Peace had an aesthetic scheme, too, and guess what it was about. Also, it's the year 2000 — you can like both Bruce Conner and Picasso.

In fact, Out There will go further than that. OT likes local artists like the celebrated bunny-lover Tino Rodriguez and Lori

The Wet Look

Not that we're any kind of Olympics watcher — for us, the arts pages have always been the sports pages — but we couldn't help but notice the front-page photos of all those swimming matches down under in Sydney. Now what is the deal with those newfangled, one-piece swimming outfits that look like high-tech wetsuits gone terribly, terribly wrong? We saw one broadcast which suggested that the male Olympians like them because the old standard-issue Speedos were just too revealing. It seems the new cover-up monstrosities are here to stay. It's like the difference between cling wrap and Tupperware.

Gold-medal swimmer Ian Thorpe

del Mar, whose joint Material/Myth showing at Belcher Studios Gallery kicked off last Friday night with a reception deluxe. Rodriguez's baroque paintings full of imagery and symbolism, and del Mar's miniatures about materials and surfaces share a certain sumptuous aesthetic; it made sense that the gallery was strewn with rose petals, and that the gorgeous ambient sound was cooked up by DJ Mark Mardon. Through Oct. 8 at Belcher Studios, 69 Belcher St.

Out There takes our pleasure where we find it — at our local gourmet Belgian fries place, for example, Frjtz, in the former Mad Magda's cafe on trendy Hayes Street. There, Denmark-based artist Philip Pedersen is showing

Artist Philip Pedersen

But surely Aussie gold-medalist hottie Ian 'Thorpedo' Thorpe was just as revealed in his all-over latex bodysuit — if anything, the wet, midnight-blue rubberized apparel hugged his streamlined bod and accentuated every swell.

Now do you see why we don't watch sports?

Boys' town

Despite our injured paw, we did hoof it over to Theatre Rhino last week to enjoy Naked Boys Singing! with the rest of the salivating gay populace. Soon we were "Rockin' at the Rock," for we had a hoot indeed at Naked Boys, the only show in town with lyrics that rhyme "hands" with "glans."

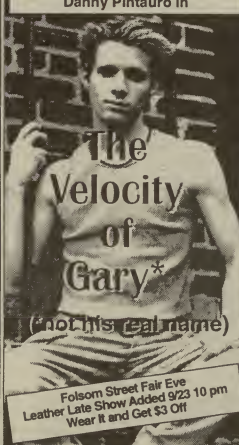

At show's end, we joined the herd of gay men trooping back up 16th St. to pinker pastures, until our date, the inimitable Pepi, insisted we hang back in the 'hood, and break away from the stampede.

"I feel like I'm part of a gay tour group!" exclaimed the P. "It feels like we're going to get turned back on the dock at Istanbul!"

What a nimble wit he is. And you thought we loved him because, according to expert pornologist Karr, he looks "just like Brent Banes [of Sexpack 1 fame]!" In fact, he's better than even that. Happy b'day, Thing, and many more! ▼

An exercise in self-absorption

Varla Jean Merman's 'Enough About Me: An Unauthorized Autobiography'

by Richard Dodds

It's not always easy being the man behind the woman. Just ask Jeffery Roberson, who has found that many men are adverse to dating someone whose stage name is Varla Jean Merman.

"I have countless memories of those conversations when I finally tell them, after I've made sure they've had a drink or two, and usually it's been horrifying," Roberson said. "A lot of people really react strongly and don't want anything to do with it."

He also tried to keep Varla Jean in the closet when he was still day-jobbing it as an art director at several prestigious advertising agencies. "It always starts out where I don't want them to know because there is some sort of stigma to it," Roberson said. "I don't want them thinking I'm a prostitute or something. But someone would find out, and then everyone would know. But mostly they were very supportive. I even performed in drag at the Foote, Cone & Belding Christmas party."

Now Roberson is a full-time performer, and his current boyfriend knew all about Varla Jean Merman before they started dating. "There was shame around it before," Roberson said, "but now I like what I do."

After inventing Varla Jean Merman in New Orleans in the early '90s for a joke video, he created an act that he would perform in gay bars. That his natural tenor could move into a very credible soprano helped make this a drag act with a vocal difference.

"When you're performing in bars, the main thing is to get people's attention," Roberson said. "I found I was needing to get dirtier and dirtier to keep people's attention — I guess Madonna had the same problem — but when I started singing in cabarets in New York, you could go in other directions and still keep their attention."

But it wasn't until he performed earlier this year in an actual theater in New York that he got the respect of the critics. "You have to get into a theater for The New York Times to see you," he said. "I always thought my shows were pretty theatrical anyway."

That show, Enough About Me: An Unauthorized Autobiography, begins a month-long run Sept. 30 at the New Conservatory Theatre Center. After multiple appearances at the late Josie's Cabaret, this will be Varla Jean's first theatrical gig in San Francisco. "But it's still very cabaret-esque," Roberson said.

The new show is described as an exploration of self-absorption. There are songs, including a medley of "Burn, Baby, Burn" and "Carmina Burana," several videos, and the trademark encounter with a can of aerosol cheese.

One reviewer in New York complained in an otherwise favorable review that the gross-out humor seems passé in the classier circumstances of the new show. But Roberson said he doesn't have a choice.

"The cheese really has become my signature number, and whenever I don't do it, people are screaming for it. But it really does work in this show. The show is loosely based on someone trying to discover why they are so self-absorbed, and they realize that they've done everything to excess. And food has been a big part of it, especially since so much of my life mirrors Varla's. I've lost a lot of weight, and so the cheese thing is a kind of peek back to when I could go on stage and eat a two-pound block of Velveeta and not worry about it."

The 6-foot-2 performer is now a svelte 190 pounds, and though it didn't change his social life as much as he expected, it had unexpected consequences for Varla Jean Merman. "I found in drag that the minute I got thin,"

Roberson said, "the same things I would say as a fat

person would suddenly be thought of as negative. People thought I was mean. I had to change the act."

The 30-year-old Roberson doesn't know how long he wants to keep Varla Jean alive. He looks to Charles Busch's career, which has branched from writing drag roles for himself to creating plays for others. Roberson also spent several months on the road earlier this year in the national tour of Chicago, playing sob-sister reporter Mary Sunshine, who is revealed to be a man at the very end.

It's the most mainstream he's gone, but he still hasn't told his mother back in Arkansas what his career is all about. "My mother is a Southern Baptist, and even if I could tell her what I did, some of the material is enough for her to never speak to me again," Roberson said. "My mother doesn't know who Madonna is, so if Madonna can get by my mother, I think Varla Jean Merman can."

For more information on Varla Jean Merman's show at New Conservatory, call 861-4914.

Tolerance 101

Also at New Conservatory, but in a far different vein, The Other Side of the Closet makes a return appearance prior to a tour of Northern California schools. First seen in a trial run last March, playwright Edward Roy's look at teenage homophobia is playing a series of public performances through Oct. 8 in NCTC's Tolerance Educational Theatre Program for Teens.

The play tells the story of three high school guys who like to curse out faggots, real or imagined, and to occasionally throttle them. When one of them gets caught coming out of a gay bar, he is rejected by his friends and made a pariah at his school. In the midst of this, the ostracized teen must deal with coming out to his parents.

Before receiving its United States debut at New Conservatory, The Other Side of the Closet played a national tour of Canada in 1999. Despite Roy's intentional exclusion of profanity and sexual scenes, it created a backlash from some parents and school administrators.

"This play is not about shaking anyone's faith or denouncing anyone's spirituality," New Conservatory artistic director Ed Decker said. "The aim of this play is to provoke a dialogue." To that end, a discussion will follow each performance.

This is not the first time New Conservatory, which annually produces a Pride season of gay drama, has reached out to young people. The theater developed the country's first HIV theater-in-education program in association with the Federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in 1986.

Curran events

The Curran Theatre, recently home to a touring production of Les Miserables, has picked up three new fall bookings.

First up, young dance-legend Savior Glover will bring his show Foot Notes to the Curran on Oct. 24 - Nov. 5. The "tap concert" features such tap veterans as Jimmy Slyde, Buster Brown, and Dianne Walker.

The wayward magic of Penn & Teller will move into the Curran Nov. 21-Dec. 3. It will be the popular team's first Bay Area appearance in more than five years.

Comedy writer Bruce Vilanch, who has become a personality in his own right, will perform his one-man show Almost Famous at the Curran on December dates to be announced.

Tickets will be available through Ticketmaster at 512-7770. ▼

San Francisco International Art Expo comes to town

by Michael McDonagh

International art expos are golden opportunities for dealers to showcase their artists in a competitive yet convivial setting. Visitors get to see the works of artists they know, and may even discover new ones.

One of the most famous art fairs was New York's 1913 Armory Show, which introduced the public to works like Marcel Duchamp's "Nude Descending a Staircase," and boy, were they shocked. 1994's Art New York International wasn't controversial, but the work looked great and so did the people, and who wouldn't be thrilled to be in the art capital of the world?

Though San Francisco lacks Gotham's cachet, it does have a tradition of hosting international art fairs like the 1915 Panama-Pacific Exposition, whose buildings occupied the entire Marina, though only the Palace of Fine Arts remains. That district is back in the news again this week, when the San Francisco International Art Exposition will be at the Herbst and Festival Pavilions at Fort Mason from September 22-25, and it's sure to be a good one. Produced by Chicago's Thomas Blackman Associates, it's also the third annual Expo our city has hosted. SF3, as its organizers call it, should offer a pretty comprehensive view of contemporary art. This juried expo will have works by more than 2,000 artists from 96 galleries in 12 countries. A full quarter of the galleries are West Coast-based, with blue-chip heavy-hitters like San Francisco's John Berggruen, and Kathan Brown's famed (and wonderful) Crown Point Press, and the fine art book one, Arion. The other three-quarters of the exhibitors are European, Latin American and Asian galleries, though the numbers are heavily weighted to the US.

Still, the representation is indeed international, and famous midtown New York galleries like Pace, Robert Miller (they have the Mapplethorpe estate) and Marlborough will be showing their wares. Marlborough will be presenting paintings by Ohio's most famous expatriate, R.B. Kitaj — he lives in London, and has done a portrait of gay composer Lou Harrison — and Lucien Freud (yes, the grandson of the inventor of psychoanalysis). Marlborough's graphics department will also have a generous selection of works by established artists like Alex Katz, and up-and-coming ones like the Uruguayan artist Ignacio Iturria, who's done a new monoprint series; as well as stunning pieces by the Chilean-born Claudio Bravo which sometimes seem to emulate Spanish Baroque artists like Zubaran and Velasquez. Bravo lives in the late Paul Bowles' Tangier. The gallery will also show photography-based works by Seton Smith and others which highlight the mutual influence between new and old technologies, which is just a fancy term for saying different ways of making art.

The fair also includes famous American masters like Georgia O'Keeffe, Edward Weston, Richard Diebenkorn, and the eternally gay, British-born David Hockney. But one of the biggest coups is the inclusion of works on paper by the Chilean-born Surrealist painter Roberto Matta, which were done in New York between 1937 and 1942. These museum-quality pieces were acquired from the estate of Henri Matisse's dealer son, Pierre. Galeria Ramis Barquet (New York and Mexico City) has the honor of presenting pieces by this wonderful painter who had a decisive personal and artistic influence on many artists of the New York School like Jackson Pollock and Arshile Gorky.

SF3 should give art professionals, collectors, and the general but interested public an eyeful of what's been going on in 20th-century art, and how it's impacted our barely entered 21st. We may be on the ground floor of a new epoch, but great things have happened before we got here. And in this fair, you'll get to see both. ▼

First Thursday

◀ Arts cover

tuguese bullfighters.

And for those who find the prices at Fraenkel astronomical, there is hope: in the last gallery, a Teleface Telephone is on sale for only $45.

Aural Sex, at Catharine Clark Gallery, is an exhibition of artists who work in sound. (It reflects other acoustic-based installations around town, including one at San Francisco and Oakland's twin CCAC galleries.) There are some hits and some misses in this intriguing concept show curated by Marcia Tanner. The inherent difficulty in presenting sound installations in a relatively small space is that they compete with each other far more than visual artworks. Some of the installations suffer from juxtaposition.

"Bibbity Bop" is an abstracted pornographic video cartoon with a goofy soundtrack that makes sex fun. Three thousand animation stills have been assembled by Chicago artist Alison Rutan into a giddily jumping series of Miro-like shapes which fuck each other silly.

Sheri Simons' "Inert Raga," a padded room, provides a contemplative moment within the bombardment of sounds elsewhere in the gallery. The visitor may close in on whispering speakers by lying down in a womb-like chamber with a view of a ceiling-mounted, slit-shaped monitor, or hang from a rubber sling.

Adriana Arenas' "Sweet Illusion" is a Rohrschach double-video of cotton candy being spun to the tune of a Spanish-language love ballad. Filmed high above the artist's native Bogotá, it shows the confection evaporating at the high altitude. The video and its accompanying karaoke sing-along soundtrack made me laugh.

At the other end of the spectrum, Reuben Lorch-Miller has installed a dignified-looking minimalist piece which looks like the overhead fluorescent lights of your average office. Beaming down from it, however, is a human "hum," a juxtaposition which is the height of ridiculousness.

Extra bonus: By calling (415) 399-1439 after gallery hours, you can hear the voice of Aural Sex in the privacy of your own home. Through October 7.

Video hunt

All Heads Turn When The Hunt Goes By, a solo exhibition by Anthony Disenza at Jennjoy Gallery, more than fills the large gallery with one video installation. Fragmented images, both moving and static, assault the visitor in a frantic rush from one wall of the room, caught within a sort of rhomboid-shaped projection. The footage is born as random television screens which are recorded at different focal lengths and then re-scanned by Disenza, who manipulates the flickering, conflicting images to his own effect. The title comes from a Norse legend of the hunt for dead souls. A disquieting hum of a soundtrack accompanies the visuals, reminding the viewer of a test-pattern; is the TV on, or is it playing only in your head? The Oakland-based artist has been shown internationally in venues as local as New Langton Arts and as prestigious as the Venice Biennale. All Heads Turn... continues through September 30.

Two artists complement each other beautifully on either side of a central wall in Patricia Sweetow Gallery this month. Expatriate American Robin Carnes, who lives in Switzerland, has installed a contemplative exhibition of her recent works on paper; a concurrent exhibition opens this month at the Berkeley Art Museum. While not literal "landscapes," her watercolors and drawings with powdered graphite evoke a peaceful horizontality.

Next door, the gallery is alive with the primary colors of Carlos Estrada-Vega. At first sight, the grid-like compositions resemble similar paintings of Gerhard Richter, but upon closer inspection, a subtle texture becomes clear. Like mosaics, the blocks of color in works like "Juego de Amarillos" are actually three-dimensional masses arranged on a vertical plane. When I asked the artist how they were held together, he walked over and removed a block from an upper left corner! The secret is magnets on the back of the painted blocks, which hold them onto a metal panel. Estrada-Vega, whose background is in industrial line work, sees his hands-on production of these meticulously made blocks as a tribute to the labor movement and to the Mexican muralists of the mid-20th century who glorified it.

At Stephen Wirtz, Kathryn Van Dyke, who was recently awarded a SECA (Society for the Encouragement of Contemporary Art) award and a chance to show her work at SFMOMA, has installed a gallery of acrylic diptychs and other single paintings. My favorite was a monochrome tondo which is given central prominence on the back wall. Guess what makes it glow before you get too close. ▼

'Tsar's Bride' kicks butt

But SF Opera is upstaged by LA Opera

by Stephanie von Buchau

It's a good thing that San Francisco Opera's premiere of Rimsky-Korsakov's The Tsar's Bride was so fabulous, because earlier in the day Los Angeles Opera had administered a good, old-fashioned butt-kicking to our local company. Artistic director Plácido Domingo announced LAO's first production of Wagner's Ring of the Nibelung — designed by Marin County's Industrial Light and Magic. I first suggested this no-brainer to Terry McEwen before his 1985 Ring, and was laughed out of the room. I questioned Lotfi Mansouri about the same idea several years before SFO "updated" McEwen's production so hideously last summer. I was told that a) nobody had thought of it and b) cybertypes "didn't like opera; when they have spare time, they barbecue."

Even worse news was the announcement that LAO and St. Petersburg's Kirov Opera were forming an alliance and that Valery Gergiev — read it and weep — was going to conduct The Queen of Spades, Eugene Onegin and The Love of Three Oranges in Los Angeles. Gee, weren't we told that Gergiev's defection to the Metropolitan Opera from SFO meant that he would be exclusive Met property? Face it, possums, San Francisco has been royally screwed, upstaged by Los Angeles, where they still think Disney is "art."

A final blow to local operatic esteem was that Tsar's Bride was supposed to be conducted by Yuri Temirkanov, but his commitments in Baltimore (musical armpit of the world) meant that SFO had to secure a substitute maestro. They chose Neeme Jarvi, who spends more time in the recording studio than on the podium; for the first act, at least, I most musical academic, takes time to get going. It opens with genre music, a choral fugue and Grigory's long, morose narrative about how he is head-over-heels in unrequited love with the beautiful Marfa, a merchant's daughter, unfortunately (for Grigory) betrothed to her childhood sweetheart. When Ivan the Terrible spots her in the street, she becomes unbetrothed and forced to marry the sinister Tsar. Both Grigory and Lyubasha obtain evil po-ter; atmospheric but not blinding lighting by Tom Munn; modestly effective choreography by Lawrence Pech; and Ian Robertson's impressive chorus. Mansouri handled the crowds adroitly, steered Netrebko in the right direction for her tremendous mad scene (I hate to say it, but I wish that Pat Racette's Luisa had been this touching), and produced a genuine frisson when Tsar Ivan (silent actor John Ames, sporting an Eisenstein nose and body language) sees Marfa in the town square.

All of this would have been meaningless without great singing. I haven't heard an SFO premiere this glamorously cast since McEwen's Maometto Secondo brought us June Anderson, Marilyn Horne, Simone Alaimo and Chris Merritt in 1988. "Olga Volga" (remember Stalag 17?) may have been prima inter pares, but everybody sang gorgeously, especially the Kirov contingent. Netrebko, whom I sometimes find strident and out of tune in non-Russian music, nailed Marfa's mad scene with affecting Golden Age vocalism.

Character mezzo Irina Bogacheva made a tasty meal of her narration; Ognovenko was magisterial as Lyubasha's "godfather"; and tenor Nikolai Gassiev, who sings Grishka Kuterma in Rimsky's radiant Invisible City of Kitezh, was loathsome as the apothecary to whom Lyubasha submits in order to obtain the deadly potion. These artists do not fool around; even a preposterous romantic melodrama like Tsar's Bride seems like real life-and-death in their hands. What a pity that this is the last Kirov-inspired piece we're likely to hear. Unless we fly to Los Angeles. ▼

The Tsar's Bride continues in repertoire through September 29. SFO box office: 864-3330.

'Tsar's Bride' has a melodic score overflowing with brilliant orchestral ideas. Every part is a star turn, no matter how small.

thought we were in deep doo-doo. The sexy duet between Grigory Gryaznov, the opera's complex villain, and Lyubasha, his discarded mistress, was only half as incendiary as I remembered it from the concert performance I heard in New York in 1995.

Olga Borodina was the Lyubasha in both performances. Her Act I unaccompanied aria is the highlight of the score when sung like this — rapt, perfectly placed and tuned, expressive singing that so mesmerized the audience you couldn't hear a single cough or rustle from that usually restless crowd. But Dmitri Hvorostovsky's Grigory, while he possesses a creamy Siberian baritone and brooding good looks, lacked the edge that Sergei Leiferkus had brought to the part in New York. (More SFO casting weirdness: Leiferkus as Renato in Un Ballo and Hvorostovsky as Grigory, instead of the other way around?)

Head over heels

This 1899 opera, written by a man who was the world's fore-tions from a sleazy apothecary, and poor Marfa (Anna Netrebko) is doomed. Goody gumdrop for us, because that means she sings a fantastic bel canto mad scene, while Lyubasha and Grigory get terrific "guilt" music.

It's a melodic score, overflowing with brilliant orchestral ideas — remember that without Rimsky's example, there would be no Puccini or Stravinsky for us to adore. And Tsar's Bride needs to be cast just as it was here — every part a star turn, no matter how small. How can SFO offer three inadequate low male voices in Luisa Miller and then, in Tsar's Bride, give us such studs as Hvorostovsky, Vladimir Ognovenko and Kevin J. Langan? Langan has so recovered his former power and presence (lacking the last few years) that, without looking at the program, I thought he was Russian, too.

Tsar's Bride is one of Mansouri's "good shows" (often meant as a pejorative), yet here it works. Excellent acting; a realistic setting by Zack Brown that follows the composer's instructions to the let-

From 'Chorus Line' to 'Ragtime'

Jim Corti is SF-bound in touring musical

by Richard Dodds

Just like the character in A Chorus Line, Jim Corti tagged along with his sister to her dance class, looked around, and said to himself, "I can do that." And he did, tapping joyously around the family house in Trenton, NJ, until he decided that wasn't the image he wanted to project. He joined the swim and track teams instead.

Corti, who went on to appear in A Chorus Line on Broadway and is one of the stars of the San Francisco-bound Ragtime, was going through a private hell in high school as he tried to suppress longings that he knew were not acceptable. It didn't help that he was growing up in a conservative Italian family.

"We were very over-protected, over-protected," Corti said. "The only times I went to New York were my high school trips, and believe me, they were profound experiences. I remember my Spanish class went to see the original Man of La Mancha, and I thought I was going to lose my mind. I was like, like, levitating out of my seat."

That he was gay suddenly didn't seem so onerous once he landed in Chicago for college. "Being with students from both coasts broadened my perspective on what sexuality was," he said. "It helped me greatly."

Theater was his major, and his first professional job after graduating in 1972 was in a production of Cyrano de Bergerac at ACT in San Francisco. He didn't get back to his song-and-dance roots until he turned 24 and saw a production of Bob Fosse's Dancin' in Boston. "I just wanted to do it so badly, and I got into a class and started working really hard." He eventually landed a role with the Dancin' tour, which also played San Francisco.

"After the influence of doing Fosse, I just didn't feel I could do 42nd Street or Cats or something like that," he said. "And he fed me this stuff that made me feel I could choreograph and direct."

Corti, now 50, made Chicago his home base for 14 years, working steadily as a director, choreographer, and performer. It was a happy and productive time, and it even brought him back to San Francisco in a tour of Cabaret starring Joel Grey.

"I played one of the new roles they had written for that revival," Corti said. "His name was Bobby, and he's one of the flammers at the Kit Kat Klub. I also understudied Mr. Grey. I was playing the emcee in Cabaret in Chicago, and they were canvassing every actor currently doing the emcee somewhere in the country. I got this message asking if I would be interested in auditioning to be Joel Grey's understudy, and I thought it was a joke. I did that for a year, but Joel Grey never missed a performance. Not once."

Landing a lead

He headed back to Chicago, but after he landed the lead in Strike Up the Band at the Goodspeed Opera House in Connecticut, his focus began to change. "I was working with all these New York-based actors, and they were going, 'What are you doing in Chicago?' The following year I got Ragtime, and I was on my way."

Corti has been with Ragtime since its inception in 1996. On Broadway, he played Houdini and understudied his current role, a fictional immigrant named Tateh who arrives at Ellis Island with his motherless daughter. In the adaptation of E.L. Doctorow's novel, Tateh forms one of the main pillars of a story that weaves together fictional and historical characters as it looks at white, black, and immigrant society at the turn of the century.

Fairy magic

by Richard Dodds

Both ACT and Berkeley Rep have opened their seasons with elaborate variations on fairy tales, and while ACT may have the budget, Berkeley Rep has the magic.

Despite all its levitating tricks, ACT's Hans Christian Andersen seems downright leaden compared to The Green Bird at Berkeley Rep. Here is true theatrical magic created from fertile minds working with talented performers. And while descriptions of the production as a combination of commedia dell'arte and kabuki techniques sound potentially grim, the happy fact is that The Green Bird is often hilarious.

I'm not at all sure that what director Dominique Serrand of Minneapolis' Theatre de la Jeune Lune has wrought would amuse Carlo Gozzi, the theatrically reactionary playwright who wrote The Green Bird in 1765, but he's not around anymore to complain. His fantastical story has become the medium for a delightful exploration of theatrical styles and storytelling techniques that are hardly conservative.

The eponymous green bird, regally played by Michael Edo Keane, is a kind of fierce fairy godmother who protects and guides the characters. At the heart of the tale are a prince (an amusingly fussy Stephen Cartmell) and a princess (a droll Stacy Ross) who were rescued from a murderous grandmother and raised from infancy by a crude sausage-stuffer (comic master Geoff Hoyle) and his dithering but well-meaning wife (a beguiling Sarah Agnew). When the siblings realize they are adopted, they abandon their foster parents in a rocky search for their true selves.

Serrand's production combines everything from hard-core burlesque to exquisite puppetry to tell the tale. In addition to directing and designing the production, he also delightfully plays a fumbling poet who serves as a kind of quasi-narrator.

The mourning king, who believes his wife and children to be dead, is given an appealing comic edge by Vincent Gracieux. His overbearing mother, played as a kind of kabuki Divine, is hilariously rendered in Brian Baumgartner's imposing performance. Jenny Lord, as a statue who comes to life, transforms herself from stately to ditzy with comic finesse.

Of course, not everything works. The anachronisms that dot the production work best when they remain casual. References to ATM cards, dot-com issues and Xanax yank us too far out of the spell being woven on stage. And for the final 15 or 20 minutes, it feels as though the production is treading water as it works to tie up the convoluted plot. But these are minor distractions in an otherwise playful and transporting experience. ▼

Time capsule

Marin Theatre Co.'s 'As Thousands Cheer'

by Richard Dodds

The notion of disposable theater does not suggest a far-reaching creative significance, but it once filled a significant role on Broadway. A show like As Thousands Cheer, now at the Marin Theatre Company, could entertain audiences for a season, make some money for its producers, and keep the theater artists both refreshed and employed.

Nobody had to worry that the topical references that provided the backbone of the 1933 musical revue would become dated, because by 1934 they'd all be at work on a new show. And for audiences, a top ticket price of $4.40 didn't take the comparative pocketbook toll that $80 does nowadays. Theatergoers could afford to see musicals that didn't promise an experience of "now and forever."

Moss Hart's script for As Thousands Cheer is mostly light-hearted satire. Among the topics that Hart poked fun at were the Joan Crawford-Douglas Fairbanks Jr. divorce, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Hoover's final days in the White House, Gandhi's savvy skills at self-promotion, Noel Coward's effete ways, and John D. Rockefeller's miserly personality. The bite is mostly mild, but it's interesting to see how irreverently Gandhi was viewed in his own day.

As did the original Broadway, Marin's production uses projected headlines to suggest that the sketches and songs have leapt from the pages of the morning paper. Irving Berlin's songs offer a much more generic take on the news (the weather, for example), allowing four to find an enduring life: "Easter Parade," "Heat Wave," "Harlem on My Mind," and "Supper Time."

The latter is a black woman's plaintive reaction to the lynching of her husband, and the jarring note it still sounds amid the frivolity must have stunned audiences in 1933. Ethel Waters sang it, and it marked the first time a black performer was featured on the same stage with a white cast. When the white cast members, who included Clifton Webb and Marilyn Miller, balked at sharing their curtain call with a Negro, Irving Berlin decreed that there would simply be no curtain call at all. They relented.

Rediscovered Hart

Marin's production provides a context for these kinds of theatrical footnotes, and it also offers a window to the styles of social satire of 67 years ago. Television has taken over that role today, and the barbs seem light compared with Saturday Night Live and David Letterman's Top 10 List. But the authenticity is appreciated, and the fact is that no one had seen or read Hart's material for decades until it was discovered in a Warner Bros. basement in 1990.

The notion to revive As Thousands Cheer came from director Albert Takazaukas and choreographer Richard Gibbs, but Takazaukas (an openly gay director working in mainstream theater and opera) died of a heart attack days before rehearsals were to begin. The estimable Danny Scheie, known for his rollicking gay-flavored productions of Shakespeare, took over as director.

The production is a spry, good-natured affair that shines the most in the musical numbers staged by Gibbs. The cast of 11 moves well, and the lively steps suggest the Broadway styles of the 1930s. Musical director Billy Philadelphia provides assured support.

Martin Lewis and Clark Sterling possess the strongest voices, Lesley Hamilton displays the keenest comedic talents, and Carleton Alexander offers a sleek and slinky dance persona. Karen Hall, Brian Herndon, Amy Lyn McDonald, Brian Yates Sharber, Liz Stimson, and Colin Thomson are their agreeable comrades in comedy and song.

At under two hours, As Thousands Cheer is a tuneful, good-natured theatrical time machine that recalls an era when Broadway wasn't a once-a-year occasion for audiences, and when theater's best and the brightest could also afford to have fun. ▼

As Thousands Cheer will run at the Marin Theatre Company through Oct. 1. Tickets are $24 to $40. Call 388-5208.

'A black silence almost as violent as laughter'

Jean Cocteau's 'Orphic trilogy' on DVD

by Gary Morris

Jean Cocteau (1889-1963) has been called the most versatile artist of the 20th century, and in this case hyperbole has at least some basis in reality. Born to a middle-class family in Paris, he excelled from youth in an almost absurd range of fields: filmmaking, poetry, graphic art, fiction, drama, couture, even postage-stamp design. Most of all, Cocteau was a brilliant, witty, self-invented personality whose talents put him at the forefront of practically every "ism" of the century, from Surrealism to Modernism to Dada. The persistence of fairy tale, mythological, and other classical motifs in his work adds gravitas — a word Cocteau would no doubt bristle at, as being much too serious — which makes it arguably unique in modern art.

While it's hard at this point to judge the breadth of his achievement — much of his work outside cinema is difficult to find — his films have been consistently available as staples of the arthouse circuit, cine clubs, and classrooms devoted to the aesthetics of cinema. Cocteau was not prolific in this area: he made only six films over a three-decade period. Of these, four — Beauty and the Beast and the "Orphic trilogy" — stand almost sui generis as representatives of the poetic consciousness in cinema. The Criterion Collection's recent release of the Orphic trilogy in a DVD boxed set affords a welcome chance to reassess these works that were a crucial part of many cinephiles' introduction to the art of film. All three benefit from crisp digital transfers, restored sound, and new English subtitle translations.

The Blood of a Poet (1930) is the disc most crowded with extras, including a gallery of rare behind-the-scenes photos, a near-feature-length documentary on Cocteau by Edgardo Cozarinsky, a transcript of the director's lecture given at a 1932 screening of the film, a 1946 essay on the film by Cocteau, and a bibliofilmography. This orgy of supplements was a smart move on Criterion's part, since The Blood of a Poet, while still fascinating after seven decades, is nonetheless the weakest of the trilogy.

Cocteau's immersion in surrealism accounts for both the pleasures and drawbacks of the film. Like another surrealist classic, L'Age d'Or, Blood of a Poet was financed by a familiar patron in that world, the Vicomte de Noailles. Both films are concerned with dream states, mysterious autobiography, the martyrdom of artists, and startling visual non sequiturs. Cocteau's search for his muse is at its most explicit here, with American surrealist Lee Miller portraying a statue that comes to life to open the way to a dreamy netherworld. Dividing his film into four parts with titles like "The Wounded Hand, or the Scars of a Poet" and "Do Walls Have Ears?," Cocteau attempts what few would dare: the visualization of an interior space — namely, the poet's mind. Thus, bizarre imagery abounds, from the artist (Enrique Rivero standing in for Cocteau) passing through a mirror, to a talking mouth that appears on his hand, to a wealthy couple inexplicably playing cards on a snowy street while a dead boy lies at their feet.

Poet as hunk

Droll intertitles enliven the film's slow, stately pace ("The desperate hermaphrodites' meetings took place in room 23"), and fans of gay subtext will be intrigued by Rivero's shirtless, hypermasculine image: poet as hunk. Cocteau deserves credit for the cleverness of his special effects (statues coming to life, a little girl levitating), and for the tension between the film's sophisticated script and images and its often primitive visuals. And, to his credit, the constant charge of frivolousness against Cocteau may not be entirely accurate even in this, his most self-absorbed film. Some critics have connected Blood's images to events in his life; e.g., Cocteau's father's suicide is arguably reprised here in the form of the dead child. A different kind of resonance can be found in what could be construed as his subtle attack on his patrons in the image of the wealthy couple mindlessly playing cards in the snow.

Despite such complexities, and the freshness of much of Cocteau's imagery, Blood of a Poet is ultimately something of a period piece, more a fascinating curio redolent of the era of such "shocking" bad boys as Dali, Buñuel, and André Breton than a convincing, coherent work of art.

Almost 20 years later, Cocteau directed what for many is his greatest single work, eclipsing even Beauty and the Beast in its gorgeously otherworldly tableaux of a demimonde in which life and death intermingle. Unlike its predecessor, Orpheus (1949) is clearly based on the Orpheus and Eurydice myth, in which the gifted son of Apollo tries to retrieve his beloved, Eurydice, from Hades. Here Orpheus is Orphée (Jean Marais), a smug, successful poet reviled by a younger generation who gather at the local café. When a younger rival, Cegeste (Edouard Dhermitte), is killed, Orphée is believed to be responsible. A mysterious princess (Maria Casarès) arrives to remove the body and introduce Orphée to the world of death to which she is inextricably linked. Indeed, the princess is Death in human form; she has enslaved the murdered Cegeste, but is held in check, barely, by her chauffeur, a weary suicide named Heurtebise (François Périer). Orphée's fascination with this world turns the myth on its head — instead of rescuing his wife, Eurydice (Marie Déa), he abandons her in his search for the treasures Death may hold.

Death for Cocteau is not a purely negative force, but a rich well of inspiration, and Orphée must enter that world in order to transcend his material success and relocate his lost muse. Death is also a tragic figure as embodied by the Princess, a bitter romantic who is herself oppressed.

Seemingly omnipotent, able to walk through mirrors and kill with a glance, she's in fact controlled by a frightening cabal of wizened white men who comprise a kind of underworld committee that tracks her compliance with their orders and rigorously punishes any deviations. The Princess's hints at the kinds of punishments that await her for refusing to carry out their orders add a frisson of horror that filigrees the film.

Cocteau brilliantly visualizes this underworld that controls the life above it. The portal to that world is, as in the earlier film, a mirror that thoughtfully allows the characters to pass through it

BOOKS

Cocteau erotic

by John F. Karr

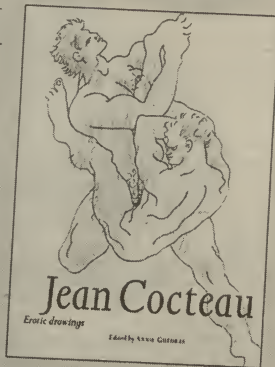

What was it, I wondered, that made several of my acquaintances sniff dismissively at The Erotic Drawings of Jean Cocteau, these sailors and tough guys, this swagger and carnival of sex? Well-chosen and knowingly annotated by Annie Guedras (Evergreen, $29.99), this book is a sumptuous collection of over 140 erotic and just plain pornographic drawings by the French genius we are most familiar with as the writer and director of the original French Beauty and the Beast. But Cocteau's seemingly inexhaustible creativity also saw him as playwright, novelist, painter, choreographer, stage designer, photographer, interior decorator (including, of all things, that of a small provincial church), promoter of strikingly handsome male actors (among them his lover, Jean Marais), and such a close friend of Edith Piaf that he surrendered his own life in grief within hours of hearing of Piaf's death.

Cocteau's life and work were openly sexual, and enveloped in a nimbus of immorality. In 1928, he illustrated his infamous homosexual manifesto, The White Paper, with some erotic but not explicit drawings, and in 1947, he provided 29 drawings for the first edition of Jean Genet's Querelle de Brest — all of which are reproduced in the present collection in all their butt-sniffing, arse-fucking, cocksucking beauty.

But why isn't this work being embraced? One man said it wasn't butch enough, which is clearly wrong; another, more pointedly, said it was foreign. And that it is, as French as an accordion and a round of Brie.

And foreign in another way. We tend to be pretty insular, and although Cocteau is the granddaddy of Tom of Finland, you won't

Penelope Cruz is the 'Woman on Top'

by Robert Julian

If pretty people, eye-catching costumes, gorgeous scenery, and wonderful music were enough to make a good movie, Woman on Top would be a blockbuster. But despite its superficial allure, director Fina Torres' first American film fails to excite — both on its own terms and by more objective cinematic measurements. Aspiring to the standards of mystical romantic fable set by Like Water for Chocolate, Woman on Top finally levels out somewhere between the self-consciousness of Waiting to Exhale and the sappiness of City of Angels.

In her first leading role in a Hollywood production, Spanish actress Penelope Cruz proves just as alluring in English as she is in her native tongue. Cruz plays Isabella Oliveira, a Brazilian chef who works in the restaurant of her philandering husband Toninho (Brazilian TV star Murilo Benicio). When she catches Toninho en flagrante with a neighbor, Isabella leaves Brazil and flies to San Francisco to move in with her cross-dressing childhood friend, "Monica" (Harold Perrineau, Jr.) Soon after her arrival, Isabella's magical culinary skills and great beauty attract the attention of television producer Cliff Lloyd (Mark Feuerstein). Faster than you can say feichoda completa, Isabella is the star of the hit television cooking show Passion Food Live. Soon Toninho arrives to recapture Isabella's love and affection.

As the well-intended television producer, Mark Feuerstein takes the obsequiousness of the blue-eyed Jewish American Prince to new lows. Feuerstein throughout needs a good throttling to bring him down to earth. Cruz and Benicio make a charming and convincing couple, and Harold Per-rineau Jr. is extremely effective in the gratuitous drag queen department. Although there is simply no reason, or excuse, for making his character a cross-dresser, Perrineau's Monica is quite a charmer; in the hands of this actor, the preposterous becomes believable. But the plot of Woman on Top suffers from a general lack of credibility that no amount of manufactured whimsy can overcome.

Tongue-tied

The one big, critical flaw of the film is the decision to have Brazilian characters speak English to each other while in Brazil, and later when they talk amongst themselves in San Francisco. They would speak Portuguese in these situations, and the use of Portuguese dialogue with English subtitles would lend the film the kind of fundamental credibility it needs to make its flights of fancy work. (Of course, one can only imagine the discussions at Fox Searchlight Pictures about Americans in Des Moines who don't want to read subtitles and are resistant to "furriners" who can't speak English.)

Woman on Top also falters in its failure to incorporate Isabella's life-long motion sickness into the story in a meaningful, integral fashion. The plot is poorly served by simply using this character trait as a quirk — an excuse for why Isabella cannot ride in elevators and cable cars, or serve as the bottom half of a missionary coupling. But this is only one of many ways in which Vera Blasi's script seems like a jumble of half-baked ideas thrown together by a committee.

Cinematographer Thierry Arbogast provides beautiful shots of Salvador, Bahia and of San Francisco, and music supervisor Frankie Pine assembles a great collection of romantic Brazilian music for the soundtrack. But despite the best efforts of cast and crew, Woman on Top never gets off the ground. ▼

Woman on Top opens Friday, September 22 at theaters throughout the Bay Area.

on their way out of the "real" world. (Cocteau used a vat of mercury to make it seem that Orpheus's hand was passing through glass.) Nicholas Hayer's camera glides gracefully through a chiaroscuro world of dark chambers, crumbling edifices, and decaying paths that the film explicitly links to the lost hopes of humanity: "Here are men's memories, and the ruins of their beliefs."

Much of the film's seductiveness rests with the characters: Jean Marais (better known as the Beast of Cocteau's 1946 film) as Orpheus, the glorious Maria Casarès (familiar as the scorned woman who exacts revenge in Bresson's Les Dames du Bois de Boulogne) as tormented Death, and François Périer as the reluctant chauffeur whose search for an unattainable ideal, even after death, has a tragic intensity. Criterion's sharp transfer does justice to Cocteau's superb mise-en-scene, and it's fleshed out with a 1950 essay on the film by its maker.

Time tunnel

Testament of Orpheus (1959) was the final entry in the trilogy and Cocteau's final film. Here the portentousness of the first two films is less evident, replaced by a whimsical "plot" (too strong a word for what actually occurs) about an 18th-century poet who time-travels in a search for inspiration. The film opens with a visual quote that links it to Orpheus, a scene of the Princess and Heurtebise heading into "final death."

Cocteau, then 70 years old, plays a character more or less based on himself, a slightly buffoonish poet who refuses to disappear. His self-reflexivity is in full flower here, as he meets the characters from Orpheus, along with assorted gods and goddesses, historical figures, and mythic creatures, including a centaur. Among those he encounters is his own fictional creation Cegeste, who gives him a flower that he attempts to draw (of course, in a fit of comic hubris, he renders it as an image of himself). After this, he is killed by a goddess, then magically resurrected to continue his journey through time and space.

Cocteau populates this engaging fictional world with many of his friends, lovers, and peers, including his longtime partner Jean Marais, his adopted son Edouard Dhermitte (Cegeste), Yul Brynner, Pablo Picasso, and others. The effect on viewers aware of these connections makes the work striking indeed, another example of the filmmaker's singular skill in interweaving reality and fantasy long before such generic hybrids as the "docudrama" gained currency.

The Testament of Orpheus answers some of the questions posed by Orpheus. The fates of the Princess and Heurtebise, for example, are resolved when they appear as part of an underworld tribunal that puts Cocteau on trial for the crime of "repeatedly attempting to trespass into another world." His comic martyrdom permeates the film; in one scene he demands his own murder, only to reappear in a puff of smoke. If such conceits sound foolish on paper, they play with a kind of sweet urgency onscreen.

Cocteau is at his aphoristic best in The Testament of Orpheus. While the film lacks the intensity of its predecessor, it compensates with a stream of witty summings-up, not surprising considering this was his final, and in some ways most forthcoming work: "What can be proven is worthless. Poets only pretend to die. The body containing us does not know us." The richness of such phrases is mirrored in the mise-en-scene, which effortlessly shifts the viewer through a series of enchanting otherworlds.

Cocteau once said of what he wants from an audience, "I expect a black silence that is almost as violent as laughter." He wrote this in 1932 about Blood of a Poet (specifically about the "tragic gag" some say he invented), but the phrase applies equally to the series. Cocteau's masterful survey of interior worlds and his graceful shifts from wonder to terror to humor make each of the three films here estimable in its own right, transcendent en masse. ▼

Gidget goes psychotic

Charles Busch's 'Psycho Beach Party' comes to the screen

by David Lamble

It's nearly midnight and Charles Busch (aka Captain Monica Stark) is still waiting for his first closeup, still waiting for his first big screen kiss, still waiting to make love to "Kanaka," a character he made up one night in New York's East Village over a slice of pepperoni pizza. At the time, Charles and his partners in the Theatre In Limbo company needed a midnight show, a parody of all those Sandra Dee/Annette Funicello beach party movies. "Off the top of my head, I came out with the title Gidget Goes Psychotic. I knew right away that that title would pull in our cult audience in droves. You see what I mean, pretty crass thinking."

Fourteen years later, Kanaka (leader of a mangy pack of '60s surf bums) has morphed into the actor Thomas Gibson (Dharma & Greg). For years, Busch advertised himself as a "gender illusionist" — meaning he played all the parts, boys and girls — so a big love scene might mean he was kissing himself. But now the power of indie film has put Busch (looking drop-dead gorgeous in his tight-fitting LAPD uniform) into the front seat of a car with one of TV's sexiest hunks. Only there is just one problem, once the clothes come off — somebody doesn't have the right equipment.

Psycho Beach Party director Robert Lee King explains how gender illusion works in the movies. "Basically, there's three angles in the shot. One of them is Charles, the other one is Charles, and the last one is either a body double or Charles just sprouted breasts."

Busch picks up the story. "The funny part is that this love scene I was so looking forward to, and eventually neither Thomas Gibson nor I were in it! It started off me straddling this handsome straight actor, and just as it was getting very sexual, Bob calls, 'Cut!' and I'm out of there, hauled out of the car, and the body double's brought in — and all of sudden it's midnight before they can call, 'Action!'"

"Gibson was also shooting The Flintstones sequel, he had to be out of there at midnight and get to the set of The Flintstones by four. Matthew, Bob's lover, happened to be on the set, and suddenly he's in Thomas Gibson's costume, sprawled out in the front seat of this car, with this nude woman sitting on him."

Man with a mission

The year is 1983, and Charles Busch is living over a former funeral parlor in the Mission District. By day, he writes movie listings for TV Guide, his imagination cued by fleeting glimpses of his handsome neighbor: the playwright Sam Shepard is rehearsing the Magic Theatre production of Fool For Love. Busch sighs, "I kept bumping into him on the way to the john."

By night, he plays the downstairs nightclub in a funny, scary play about murder and thwarted love. All the speaking parts in Escape From Camp Kitchiwawee are played by Charles — a crazed, forest-dwelling hermit, a hunky boastful camp counselor, and three terrified kids ("a fatso, a fairy and a retard") shivering around a campfire to the tale of a trashy family dismembered limb by limb. Busch shape shifts from character to character, his elfin figure and full mane of hair at one moment depicting a 10-year-old boy wise to his mother's abuse of sleeping pills, and then, as if by magic, his face wrinkles up, the delicate fingers turn into claws, and he is his own version of Norman Bates, the ax-wielding Trudy Louise Hooker. "I held your boy's head under that water, and I chopped your husband's leg off. I kept it in my room under my bed."

Now, the road from not having sex with Sam Shepard to not having sex with Thomas Gibson is longer and quite a bit bumpier than it may sound at first. Born into a family of show-biz never-wasses, Busch grew up watching his father's frustrated ambitions to be an opera star. "My father used to sing with all those tacky, third-rate opera companies, the kind where the scenery and even the extras are painted on the backdrops. Afterwards, when my father would take me backstage, I would meet the singers. Here would be the woman I had seen on stage as the pretty heroine, and she would turn out to be some fat old schoolteacher. Rather than being disappointed, I thought it was fabulous that she could transform herself into this beautiful creature."

Busch's now 25-year career is built on the pioneering work of monologist Ruth Draper (also a crucial influence on Lily Tomlin), the theatre of the absurd of Charles Ludlam (whom Busch pestered relentlessly until Ludlam saw his show and granted him space with his fabled Ridiculous Theatre Company), as well as Hollywood grand dames like Susan Hayward, Greer Garson, Bette Davis and Joan Crawford. Charles also built on an incredible grasp of theatre history from Sarah Bernhardt through Ludlam. Most of his solo work was constructed of carefully nuanced impersonations of a wax museum of theatre greats. Charles departed from traditional "funny drag" of the Charles Pierce variety by not merely doing vengefully bitchy sendups of the great Hollywood divas, but instead inhabiting their spirits in works that were written like screenplays.

Strange diva

Even in such an insanely eclectic body of work, Psycho Beach Party has always stood out as one of the most popular and oft-performed pieces in the Busch catalogue. As Busch himself reflects, "It's kind of a raunchy play — there must have been a lot of high school teachers, tarred and feathered, run out of town on a rail because of it." Over the past 14 years, Chicklet has become one of the great drag diva roles, something that has always puzzled Busch just a little bit. "It's a strange diva role, since she's a 16-year-old girl."

With his original title for the piece, Gidget Goes Psychotic, Busch found he painted himself into a bit of a corner. "I didn't know how I was going to play Gidget. It's kind of a one-note character, and I wasn't really the beach girl type. But I thought, if she has to be psychotic, one way would be for her to have a split personality — that way, I could play different characters and be more of a femme fatale. Gidget was always taking about how flat-chested she is: I thought, 'I'm more flat-chested than any girl could be.' Of course, in this movie we have a real girl, Lauren Ambrose."

Director King notes the stylistic balancing act required to mount Psycho Beach Party for the screen. "There's seven times more voltage than you see in the average film performance. In fact, we spent a lot of time finding actors who would have the courage to play these very larger-than-life characters. When actors don't give it enough energy, it just falls flat."

King admits to being a bit of a fan of the '60s summer beach movies, films like 1964's Ride the Wild Surf, in which Jan and Dean croon the title song while Fabian and Tab Hunter fight over Shelly Fabares. King explains that these tacky low-budget films, produced mostly by American International Pictures, were pioneers in surfing the summer box office. "They actually were the first summer movies, cluing the studios in to the fact that money could be made in the summer from all these kids hanging around with nothing to do."

King adds that the relative technical sophistication of Ride the Wild Surf inspired Psycho Beach Party's beautifully cheesy rear-pro-

Candid Webcams

Innocence in front of the camera is a rare thing. So accustomed are we to photographs and photographers, it seems impossible we could ever see ourselves the way our grandparents and great-grandparents saw themselves in the early days of cameras. Far, far have we come from our ancestral days when especially the Native Americans among us protested all attempts by strangers to "capture our spirits" with their shutters. Faces in the faded images of those days often looked surprised and bewildered.

Right now, for at least a brief historical moment, when Webcam technology is still new to most people and Webcam culture is still in its infancy, it is possible again to witness innocence on people's faces. Anyone with a fast Internet connection and the appropriate software can do it. We peeping-Toms no longer need traipse through darkness and people's prickly shrubbery, risking arrest for our voyeurism; we may now easily enter people's private domains, via their inviting Webcams, and linger there as long as we like, observing them in great detail, often with clear views of their most intimate moments.

It's a devilish thing to do, but you can, if inspired, take people's pictures with their own Webcams. If you do this now, while the striking is right, the act of triggering their camera in their faces surprises the hell out of them. They'll look up abruptly, a quizzical expression in their faces. They may grin, or frown, or look suspiciously directly at the camera, as if they could gaze back into your eyes.

You can commit this act of poetic terrorism without even owning a Webcam yourself. You see them; they don't see you. This enrages people, but hey, they live far away, and they don't know who you are, or see you, or anything, unless you email them or instant-message them to say hey. Click, and you have them.

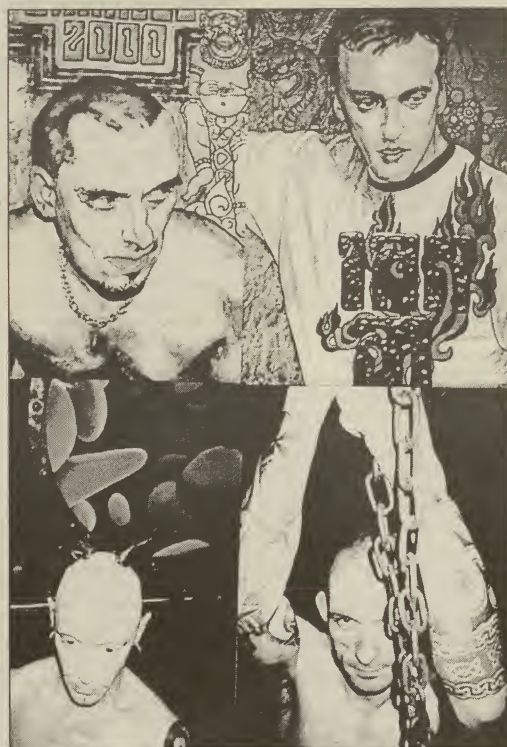

Watch the expressions on people's faces — momentary disbelief, shock that an intruder has "captured their spirit" against their will. Some people live their entire domestic lives in plain view of any Webcam browser, yet seem unprepared for anyone snapping their photo, or whole sequences of photos.

But beware the tensions that inflict the Webcam world. It's not an especially welcoming place for gays. In fact, practically every straight guy with a Webcam posts a notice, in language exhibiting widely varying degrees of intelligence and diplomacy, that: "I AM NOT GAY SO FAGS STAY AWAY. WOMEN ONLY! ICQ ME GIRLS! GUYS, DON'T WASTE MY TIME ASKING ME TO GET NAKED. IT WON'T HAPPEN. I AM NOT QUEER."

It's really interesting clicking these guys' images. They get freaked or frisky, and may or may not perform for you, depending on what fantasy is going through their minds about who's doing the clicking. Straight boys can be such teases! ▼

The male chest is a primary site of sexual display.

Pectoral erotics

attached nipples were invariably enlarged, engorged, or distended and often pierced. The male-to-male greeting du jour was a pec slap or a nipple tweak rather than a handshake. In lieu of exposed cock, exposed big nipples were the big status symbol among that fraternal mob of state-of-the-art sex-hibitionists, in that menagerie of pigs, dogs, bears, and wolves.

Online at the handful of sites dedicated to the fetish: A page called "Pec Muscle," featuring hundreds of pictures of ballooned and buffed male chests; another page called "Dream Chests," with more of the same; "The Male Chest Page," with personal ads for bearish tit-men around the world; and Chest Man International's members-only site with personal ads, pictures, nipple-enlarging instructions, stories and information on local CMI clubs, including a San Francisco chapter which hosts "Pec Parties" on the first Friday of each month.

Prominent protuberances

In gay porn, perhaps the most in-demand, non-vanilla actor working is called Titpig, and for good reason. The bearish, tattooed, well-hung, 35-ish pipe-smoker has freakazoid nipples nearly two inches long and a half-inch thick. Almost single-handedly, the porn star has popularized the visual erotics of the enlarged male nipple. He and his protuberances have appeared in over 30 videos for producers like Brush Creek Media, Titan, Hothouse, Dick Wadd, and Manhunter. For Treasure Island Media, he made a bestselling all-tit-play video called Snake Bite with San Francisco titan Daddy Chuck.

On the phone from his home in Palm Springs, Steve "Titpig" Hurley is friendly and expansive on the subject of his tits and the male chest fetish in general. The porn actor agrees with the notion that more and more guys are discovering their tits.

"Yeah, I think that just from seeing pictures or videos of guys with big nips, they're fascinated and they want them," he says. "So they start exploring and playing with themselves, maybe start pumping their tits up with vacuum pump gizmos or snake-bite kits, you know, like guys do when they're alone or with another guy, and finally they connect and find the pleasure that lies within. They get hooked."

Hurley says he got initiated into nipple play by a leather daddy ten years ago. "Before that, they were totally flat," he remembers. He says his nipples grew just by "twisting and pulling on 'em hard." Now he gets 20 to 30 e-mails each week in response to his Internet site from other men asking him how he got them so big. "That's the $98,000 question," he says wearily.

Asked about the politics of baring his extraordinary chest to the general public, he says he's a big exhibitionist.

"I always have my shirt off. I was in Hawaii last week with my shirt off the whole time. People just stare."

He laughs devilishly. "They get afraid, very afraid."

Does he, like many men these days, need nipple stimulation to get off?

"Oh yeah. The better the play,

the faster I come," he says.

Gay body-work therapist Dr. Kirk Prine advertises in San Francisco's gay papers for a "Nipple Play" workshop.

"I do the workshop," Prine explains, "to teach men to start touching from the inside out, by which I mean touching from a place of heart, a place of spirit, a place of non-judgment. A big part of what I do is teach men to use the pleasuring of nipples to bring about a more expansive experience of the whole body, not just the nipples, and not just the cock."

"We don't want to get stuck in one modality."

Prine estimates that, among men he has worked with, a good 50 percent have no erotic connection to their nipples, but says that with work there can be an "awakening."

"Most of us learn to shut our bodies down, especially over our chests and hearts, because of broken relationships, death, pain, loss. The workshop tries to open up the chest, where the heart chakra is."

Does he think the whole tit thing makes for a timely newspaper article?

"Male-to-male sex talked about in a forthright way is always timely," he says. "Telling the truth is the best work we can do." ▼

Cocteau drawing

find traces of his style in the work of today's practitioners of cartoon art. And that's the crux. While some of these drawings may be Cocteau's doodling, he was not cartooning. Local writer Robert Glück summed it up when he told me, "Cocteau is sincere." Which is not to say that today's cartoon artists aren't. "It's in their aspiration," explained Glück.

The lineage of Cocteau's work is the fine art drawings of the European tradition, closer to Ingres and Picasso than Tom of Finland or Etienne. While there are contemporary cartoonists with the draughtsmanship of Cocteau, it is not their artistry that demarcates their endeavor, but their intention.

We're perhaps overly accustomed to graphic art whose impetus is commercial; Cocteau's work requests the viewer to shift his reference, if not his expectations of erotic line drawings. And we live in unreflective times, while what Cocteau's work most inspires is reflection. Miraculously managing to unite the figurative and the abstract, Cocteau's art is made for savoring.

There's a love of male eros in Cocteau's drawing that is largely absent from today's full-blast permissiveness, which makes entrance into Cocteau's world — with its Mediterranean heat, its clouds of opium, and the husky smells of its men — a louche, timeless, and pubic-scented dream. I love the stylized profiles of his men, sort of Picasso/hieratic, and the way the contours of their bodies suggest Rodin without the bulk. I love the way their body hair uncoils happily from their limbs like confetti, and the hawklike sharpness of their gaze, and the capricious curl of their lips — intense yet playful.

There have been at least two previous editions of Cocteau's drawings, but they're hard to find (if not out of print), and they don't include the wealth of material in this volume, which covers four decades and includes much previously unpublished work. This collection, handsomely designed and bound, is an estimable gift. ▼

Oh, gay Montreal!

Report from the 24th Montreal World Film Festival

by Brandon Judell

It was a starry night when thousands of Montrealers plopped down on home-brought folding chairs to watch Jodie Foster in Victorian drag. With Anna and the King dubbed in French and screened for free on a closed-off thoroughfare, pockets of happy lesbians could be picked out by the surreal bliss emanating from their enraptured faces. Now if only k.d. lang had done the soundtrack.

But gay and lesbian perfection could be found among the 360 offerings from 55 countries being screened at the 24th Montreal World Film Festival, earlier this month.

This year as in every other, queer films were well-represented, although sometimes only with French subtitles, making Nagisa Oshima's Gohatto (Taboo), a tale of gay Samurai, out of reach for Anglophones. There were also such standard gay festival favorites as The Broken Hearts Club, starring TV's Superman and Frasier's dad as part of a clique of gays in search of true love in a shallow environment. Gurinder Chadha's What's Cooking? looks at four ethnic families in LA and how they deal with Thanksgiving. Julianna Margulies and Kyra Sedgwick shine as a lesbian couple dealing with the very Jewish Lainie Kazan's misgivings over their same-sex carryings-on, especially so near her turkey.

But there were also many discoveries and even a star or two to chat with. Gong Li, for example, who was so memorable in Farewell, My Concubine.

In her hotel suite, I queried, "Do you ever look in the mirror and ask, 'Why do people think I'm so special?'"

Laughing, Gong Li replied, "I do ask myself that question."

She also noted she never recorded an album of Madonna songs as the press reported, and she sometimes covers her face with cucumbers. "I'm not sure if it really works."

Searing Sun

Elsewhere, Iranian director Mariam Shahriar was pushing her film Daughters of the Sun, a searing look at the plight of women in Iran. While the film is not overtly gay, more an exploration of gender, in it, her heroine shaves her head and passes as a man to obtain a job as a weaver of rugs. Think Yentl without songs. Shahriar shared, "The censors in Iran wanted me to get rid of some of the scenes. They've held up the releasing for a long time. They made me suffer and aged me about 10 years."

Another film causing an uproar in its home country is Baise Moi (Fuck Me). Imagine a hardcore version of Thelma and Louise with a good dose of Russ Meyer's Faster Pussycat Kill Kill thrown in. Helmed by porn director Coralie Trinh Thi and starring two porn actresses, the low-budgeted feature created a furor when the French government tried to pull it out of theaters.

Baise Moi follows a rape victim and a prostitute who join forces against the male of the species. The duo only cease their executions when having sex with guys they choose in the style they want. But even in the midst of heated intercourse, the two are watching each other get off. It's not until the finale, though, that they kiss on the lips. (P.S. If you don't enjoy watching a male chauvinist pig get shot up the anus, stay away.)

The premier gay film here was Sébastien Lifshitz' Presque Rien (Almost Nothing), a startlingly sensual look at two teenage boys falling in love and finding that it isn't enough. Mathieu comes from a well-off neurotic family. Cédric, 18, is a gorgeous example of working-class spunk. After spotting each other on the beach, they're quickly copulating. But even explicit shots of foreskin manipulation never for an instant bring your mind down to gutter level. The film's that good.

Roland Suso Richter's A Handful of Grass tells of a young Kurdistan boy imported to Germany to sell drugs. There's only one gay moment, but it registers. The 10-year-old is pulled into a building lobby by two skinheads wanting the drugs he's already swallowed while being chased by cops. Upset they can't get high, the teens plan to rape the boy orally and anally and go into detail. Thankfully, they're interrupted. But in the end, the youth doesn't react as if this were his first such encounter.

From Peixe Lua (Moon-Fish)

Go fish

In José Álvaro Morais' Peixe Lua (Moon-Fish), the following excerpt is enacted from a Federico García Lorca play:

Young Man 1: "If I turned into dung..."

Young Man 2: "I'd turn into a fly."

Now, that's true love. The two characters spouting these romantic lines are part of an extremely confusing Portuguese film where all the fellows are gay, bisexual or semi-drag queens.

The amateur actors are from two families. The poor one consists of the handsome bisexual Gabriel, his mother the butcher, and a hot young brother who's a matador. Gabriel's godfather is the head of the rich family, containing the about-to-be-wed Maria; her gay sibling, the musical and sensitive Ze Maria; and the married bisexual Afonso. All three have been to bed with Gabriel, but only Ze Maria and Maria really love him. In one flashback, Gabriel has sex in a bathroom stall with Maria while a gay hustler and his john get at it in the next one. When Gabriel sees their shoes, he really gets turned on. This all may add up to something, but you might have to travel to Portugal to discover what.

A scene from Sébastien Lifshitz' Presque Rien (Almost Nothing)

Then there's the dear Marquis de Sade in Sade — and in this take on the scandalous writer's life, he really is a dear. Imprisoned in a former convent, Sade gets to spout, "Nature goes where it will," and, "Everything that you can imagine, I have done, but I am not a murderer." His best friends are the virginal Emilie and a gorgeous young gay man whose sugar daddy is a bewigged, obese, disintegrating dandy.

To Sade, homosexuality is just another enjoyable aspect of life, and he's not above grabbing a cock as it walks by. But his main goal is Emilie's deflowering, with the aid of a hunky gardener. This so-so shocking finale of the film has Sade, after getting whipped, choreographing Emilie's fornication as if it were the closing number of a dinner theater revival of Guys and Dolls. P.S. The gay hunk watches through a window before joining in. You won't blame him.

In Ali Zaoua, director Nabil

Ayouch spotlights Casablanca streets littered with discarded children. Some form gangs for self-preservation. In this Moroccan production, four 12-year-olds split from one such gang. Ali, their leader, consequently gets stoned to death, and his three mates spend the rest of the film trying to get him a proper burial.

Along the way, the tiniest chap is gang-banged off-screen by a group of scruffy street urchins. Less violent "consensual" homosexual acts are also a part of the boys' lives. Early on, when Ali's found to have some money, a friend asks: "You sold your ass again?" But homophobia drapes their conduct. When the rape victim, who doesn't want to snooze alone, cries to his associates: "You always say we can't sleep together!" he gets the reply, "We're not faggots."

Also noteworthy was Akira Ogata's Boys' Choir, a tale of a 15-year-old stutterer and an effeminate male soprano who team up in their orphanage and eventually fall in love. But most unforgettable was Gerardo Vera's Second Skin, an embarrassing Spanish tale of a closeted aerospace engineer split between his family and his lover, an orthopedic surgeon. Just when you thought befuddled gays no longer commit suicide by crashing their motorcycles, you learn no matter how much the times change, they still remain the same. ▼

by Mister Marcus

Two hurricanes hit the West Coast of Florida last weekend, September 14-17. One made a lasting impression on the leather/SMBD community; the other fizzled down to a lowly tropical storm, leaving the temporary sighting of a vivid rainbow over Tampa Bay.

A small army of volunteers, paid performers and technicians descended upon the Sun Coast Resort in St. Petersburg and, except for the pale-pink color of the buildings, the place could have been mistaken for a smaller version of the Pentagon. It was a top-notch platoon of dedicated workers who made International Mr. Drummer and Drummer Boy weekend a smashing success.

International Mr. Drummer, Inc. board members toiled like drones in a beehive next to the volunteers. Oh sure, there were a few glitches here and there, but they amounted to nothing. Everyone involved breathed a sigh of relief late Sunday afternoon when all the "official" duties were completed.

Without going into great detail, let's just say that around midnight on Saturday, Daniel Clark of Indianapolis (Great Lakes Region) was named International Mr. Drummer 2000 and Richie Black of Phoenix, Arizona (Southwest Region) was chosen International Drummer Boy 2000. The first runner-up for Mr. Drummer was Randal Kinnear of Pawnee, Oklahoma (Gulf Coast Region), and the Boy runner-up was Derrick Rojas of Baltimore, Maryland (Mid-Atlantic Region).

Interested observers were quick to note that in the absence of contestants from Southern California, the Northwest, Canada, and the Northeast, the Midwest so far has captured the major leather titles — i.e., IML Mike Taylor (Cincinnati) and American Leatherman Dean Ogren (Chicago). It was disappointing that there were no contestants from Southern California (Los Angeles Metro area) or the Northeast (New York Metro Area).

An informal survey of 50 people who attended Drummer rated the event a solid 9 on scale of 1-to-10.

Drummer Men and Boys made their entrance on Harleys, one driven by former Ms SFL Corky Davis, the other by a hunk from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Carl Baldwin sang a beautiful National Anthem, and the national colors were presented. Frank Nowicki was flawless as the master of ceremonies. The guy gets better with each outing. The enthusiasm of the audience was contagious. IML 99 Bruce Chopnik graciously stepped up to judge when it was learned that Drummer Magazine founder John Embry was unable to attend due to a nasty fall just before leaving

Sunday, September 24

The 17th Annual Folsom Street Fair, with hundreds of thousands of leather-oriented "families" (including pets) cavorting on Folsom St. from 7th to 12th under (hopefully) a blazing sun. Booths, food, beverages, and sights to behold, with an international cast of leather/SM/fetish players on parade. Entertainment stages, "scenes" — a day you will never forget. Mark I Chester will digitize you with his kinky camera at his 1229 Folsom studio, with a kinky photo show on display as well. Don't forget the 500 or so volunteers who helped make it a great day! Have fun, be kind to strangers, and play safe. We want to see you back next year!

Weekend, September 29 — October 1

Golden Gate Guards MC weekend run to Camp Mendocino; the fee is $145, which includes everything but a guaranteed lay! Always a fun time at a great location, and the Skunk Ride train is a treat.

In Louisville, Kentucky, it's the Great Lakes Leather Conference weekend featuring Mr. Louisville Drummer and Ms. Kentucky Leather contests, leather mart, meet & greet, workshops, play parties, and all those bluegrass studs! I'll be there judging, so you'll get the scoop here and nowhere else!

POLKSTRASSE

Dick is back in SF

by Sweet Lips

You know the new season is definitely underway when Dickie Deemer returns to San Francisco — like the swallows to Capistrano — from his summer digs in the beautiful Fire Island Pines. Yes, Dick is back this Monday from his job in the Pines. Sweet Lips knows Dickie's summer was sultry and sumptuous; after all, his Ramón was not far away, working his thing in Jersey.

Don't forget Pushy Phyllis' 50th Birthday Bash on Sat., Sept. 23, 6-11 p.m. at the South of Market Cultural Center, 934 Brannan St. The sets, by Frank Stevens, are exceptionally "ducky." I shan't miss this event, and you shouldn't either. The pre-party party will be at the Polk Rendez-Vous, 4:30-5:30 p.m. the same evening. Cocktails and canapés are promised, with a fabulous special performance by Gladys Bumps.

Next Friday, Sept. 29, 11 a.m.-1 p.m., the R-Vous will be hosting a birthday celebration for a wonderful gentleman, Mr. Thor. Thor is well-known and loved in the Polkstrasse district; his bash will be catered by Dennis "Capons and Capers" Tyler.

Sweet Lips had a lovely little drinky at the popular Cinch Saloon the other day with Jim Welsh. Woody was on vacation, but the wonderful bartender Tim was especially gracious.

Lips is sure this paper's readers don't need reminding that the Folsom Street Fair, the ne plus ultra of leather street fairs, is coming up this Sunday, Sept. 24. Oil up those chaps and get your tits out there. Mame of Portland will be here this weekend, doing what Mame does so well.

Greta Grass will have a brief hiatus from the plank at the Hob Nob. It's just for a few weeks, a medical reason.

Happy birthday to Jim Doan on Sept. 29. Glad your mother is here for a visit, Jim, she's a great lady.

Now that it's football season, don't forget the 49ers games at the Rendez-V. Lots of fun with David Kapp and L. James. Yes, the season has begun, possums — Marlena has returned from the Continent, looking fabulous. ▼ for Florida. Glad to report that he is on the road to recovery.

Mister Marcus

There were "regional" parties galore all over the complex. The Mid-Atlantic region was a riot with former Drummer Boy Ryan Goldner hosting a ceremony where some 49 people were given "camp" leather titles with sashes. It was a riot. The only one not given out was "Ms. Ayatollah of Drummer, Inc.," former I.Ms.L. Jill Carter who ran the whole thing with authority of a 5-star general. It worked!

The parade of pulchritude began only minutes after 2000; speeches were two minutes long and the boys were scored by both judges and the Drummer men. The imaginative fantasies were performed with no problem and the stage crew was adept throughout. The duo of Tim Wong and Jim Raymond as the Tally Masters was an exercise in superior teamwork - scores ready to be announced at least 30 minutes before they were due. The next morning, the sponsors were amazed at the print-out of the scores with graphs, charts and detailed scoring areas.

Thankfully both Woodie Barnes and Fraser Picard (the outgoing title holders) gave less than 15 minute stepping-down speeches, poignant, insightful, thankful and inspiring. Both received standing ovations. They did us proud this past year and will continue to do so. The Drummer Boys chipped in to buy Woodie a giant toy box with all sorts of goodies. I don't know how Woodie managed not to break down in tears from the accolades heaped on him by everyone!

Left coast leather weather

In San Francisco, two more hurricanes materialized: Hurricane "Mama" (Reinhardt) and Hurricane "Jerry" (Roberts) hit with double force on Sunday, September 17 with Leather Pride Walk 2000 and Bare Chest Calendar Auction 2000.

Slightly more than 200 leather folk made the trek from Daddy's in the Castro to the Eagle in the South of Market area for the kick-off of Leather Pride Week 2000.

I marvel at the generosity of the leather communities of the world. Combined, the two events raised a whopping total of almost $37,000!

Since Hurricane Gordon managed to put a glitch on my flight back home, I was unable to attend both the walk and the Bare Chest

Calendar auction immediately following the walk.

However, the miracles of technology came to the rescue and I've been told Lenny Broberg made the auction a success and even donated $250 at the end to make it an even $5,000 raised.

Mama's Boys and their friends and their boys helped make the Leather Walk a record-setting event with their hard work, and Nolan Finn was auctioned off for a $1,000 dinner date!

Leather folk never cease to amaze me. Neither does the weather. It was a great, leathery weekend from coast to coast.

SMMILE reports a record in booth sales for the upcoming Folsom Street Fair, and not a hotel room is left to be had anywhere.

By the way, Int'l. Mr. Leather 99 Bruce Chopnik is coming to town for the fair and needs a place to crash? Any offers out there?

Hey, have fun this weekend and above all, Play safe! ▼

Jim Corti

"It's still a great challenge playing this role," Corti said, "both in technical terms of the vocal range and the physicality, and in emotionally portraying his story. I feel it at every single performance. You don't have to think about keeping it fresh. It demands that."

The reviews on the road have been almost uniformly positive, in contrast to the largely lukewarm reception the musical faced in New York. Corti thinks part of the reason was a negative reaction to Garth Drabinsky, the musical's high-rolling producer, but he also acknowledges that the production itself may have been partly to blame.

"There was this coldness that was talked about in New York, and I guess that can be attributed to the stature of the production and the cast, and the careers and money that were at stake. We don't have that. What we're doing now is very much an ensemble piece, and we don't have individual stakes in it. We love the work, we understand it, we've evolved in it, and we very much work on stage together to make it as effective as we know it can be. I don't think the original production had those advantages."

Corti plans to be with Ragtime until next summer, when he will take back his subletted apartment right in Times Square and begin exploring his options. The money he has made from Ragtime will give him the luxury to be choosy — at least for awhile.

What he hasn't worried about in years is any professional downside to being openly gay. "Maybe it's because I'm not a leading man," Corti said, "so I can't give myself any credit for that. I don't have to project like a leading man, but I think it's different if you're a stud. We have to be careful about judging people who have that conflict."

Lately, though, Corti has been playing more husbands and fathers. "Those are the kinds of parts that I like that best," he said, "because I get to play real people. I find it very rewarding, because I don't have a real life. It's nice to play people who do." ▼

jection surf sequences. "Wild Surf" has this great surf footage that is cut in really effectively, and yet it does nothing for the movie. It actually calls more attention to itself than these real hokey films that are totally faked in the studio. So we decided to take that one step further and make our surfing shots as absurd as possible."

While his director grew up a California surf kid, Charles Busch was more a fan of "the '50s psychological suspense films — Hitchcock, Spellbound, The Spiral Staircase, Marnie. Bob also has wider taste than I do, a fondness for all those '70s slasher movies, which he forced me at knife point to watch! I still couldn't get through Halloween. [King quips that "there's a shot of Kevin Bacon in a Speedo that Charles had a particular fondness for."] My play is very much a mix of '50s psychological thrillers and '60s beach movies, and for the movie we decided to have a menage a trois — throw in those '70s slasher films, basically to jump-start the murder mystery aspect which brings in my character, Captain Monica."

Busch notes that since playing Chicklet on screen would have been too much of a stretch for today's Britney Spears crowd ("Now with the right lighting I could pass for a mature 25, but 16..."), creating the role of Captain Monica gave him a chance to realize a life-long dream of doing a genuine interpretation of one of his favorite Silver Screen divas. "Rather than having to be this very stylized Susan Hayward for the stage, I could actually be more like her in really playing with a close-up. I was kind of terrified to see the movie. You think, oh God, what if I come off as this big old ham, like some old guy with a fright wig on his head, but actually I really feel like a solid part of the film."

The filming of Psycho Beach Party gave Busch a chance for a little cinema revenge. Having been cast in two big Hollywood movies (It Could Happen To You and Ad- dams Family Values) and seen his once-substantial roles whittled down to cameos, Busch made sure that this time he would be an indispensable part of his own movie. "I wrote the part of Captain Monica so that she has all the film's exposition. Cut a single line and the story makes no sense!"

Once he was ready for his closeup, Busch made sure that his lighting would be as flattering as possible. "Since there is no time in low-budget film for screen tests, I sat Bob and the cinematographer down in front of a video monitor and I showed them two video tapes from stage performances. I said, 'Here's a tape where I look absolutely hideously ugly, see where the light is coming from,' and they watched it and I really looked horrible, like the Phantom of the Opera. 'Here's another tape where I look absolutely lovely, I'm just flooded with light.' And I have to say, when we got to the set, they did a pretty damn good job. I wouldn't say I'm giving Garbo competition, or even Sharon Stone, but I looked okay." ▼
